This company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and working four valuable and extensive tin, copper, silver lead, and arsenic mines, formerly the property of the New Holmbush and the New Redmoor Mining Companies (Limited), the working of which was stopped in 1886 owing to the insufficient capital of these companies to continue their operations during a prolonged period of depression in the prices of these metals. The mines are now acquired for this company on advantageous terms, and can be worked as a united concern at a reduced expense with more vigour and efficiency, and under much more favourable circumstances than was practicable under the former proprietorship.

The various mines contain large reserves of copper, mundic (arsenic), silver lead, and tin, besides other minerals, such as wolfram and fluor spar. The variety of minerals and the proved richness and productiveness of the lodes are quite exceptional. The bottom levels, driving east on the Flapjack Lode, appear to be entering into good tin ground, while there are strong indications of a valuable tin mine being opened up as the depth is increased. The copper ore from the Holmbush Lode is of rich quality. It will be seen by reference to Captain Bennett's report that in places it reaches the high produce of from 15 to 25 per cent.; indeed, some of the most recent samples have given 30¼ per cent. of copper and 12½ ounces of silver to the ton. The returns of calcined and other copper during the twelve months previous to stoppage amounted to 2,700 tons. Captain Bennett adds that by deeper sinking on the Holmbush Lode large quantities of high-produce copper ore will be laid open, which is of great importance, having regard to the increased value of this metal, consequent on the recent advance in its price.

Holmbush Mine is one of the most important for the production of arsenic that is now in existence. The mundic raised in twelve months previous to the stoppage in 1886 amounted to 7,421 tons, yielding 1,750 tons of refined powdered arsenic. Arrangements have been made for the acquisition of the Greenhill Arsenic Refining Works, which are in convenient proximity to Holmbush, and at which the refining operations have hitherto been carried on.

In Captain Bennett's report on Redmoor Mine he estimates the quantity of ore, chiefly tin, already opened up above the 70-fathom level, at 6,000 tons; and that by driving three deeper levels for a distance of 40 fathoms each, no less than 10,000 tons in addition would be opened out, at the moderate cost of £1,600. The working of Redmoor Mine would also produce arsenic and wolfram, together with silver lead ore of superior quality. Numerous assays have been made in ore from both mines, showing 70 to 76 per cent. of lead, and 17 to 40 ounces of silver to the ton of ore.

[illegible]

The List of Applications will Close on Wednesday, Oct. 17th, 1888, at ten a.m., for Town and Country.

Special attention is called to the following points:

1. The extensive nature of the property—4,100 acres.
2. Its proximity to sea and rail, and low freight of ore to England.
3. Cheapness of working.
4. Immense quantity of exceptionally high-grade ore.
5. Great profits on working, even supposing the price of copper should fall to £35 a ton.
6. Contract made with Messrs. Vivian and Sons, of Swansea, to take output up to 100 tons per day.

Such confidence has the vendor in the value of the mines, that he is willing to take full payment in shares.

THE EXCELSIOR COPPER COMPANY (Limited), Province of Quebec, Canada. (Incorporated under the Companies Acts, 1862 to 1886.)

PROSPECTUS.

This company is formed for the purpose of acquiring and working the rich copper mining property now called the Excelsior Mines, near West Broughton, County Beauce, Province of Quebec, Canada.

MONEY MARKET.

FRIDAY EVENING.

There has been a strong demand for money on account of the Stock Exchange settlement, and 5 per cent. was freely paid for loans till to-morrow or Monday. A considerable total was in addition borrowed for a week at the Bank of England on bills and stock, although that establishment is not supposed to lend just now. Discount rates, however, are still drooping, the best three months' drafts being taken at 3½ per cent. The same rate was quoted for four months', and 3¼, ½ for six months'. But the foreign exchanges have further receded, especially the French rate, and no further remittances of gold from Paris are probable. The American exchange is also lower. On the whole, the Bank will probably lose bullion during the next two or three weeks. To-day a considerable amount was withdrawn for Ireland, where the note circulation is generally larger about this period, through the usual autumnal fairs, and miscellaneous wants may crop up when least anticipated. Yesterday at Buenos Ayres the gold premium declined to 47½ per cent., but this rate is very high in face of the expected release of a large amount of specie by the Treasury. The prospectus of the new Argentine Conversion Loan for about four millions sterling was issued this afternoon by Messrs. Baring, and it is understood that a Santa Fé loan for about two millions will soon be launched. Other operations are known to be pending.

Apart from the settlement, there was not much activity in public securities. The markets were rather firm in the earlier hours; but a relapse ensued in the afternoon, when sales were made on the strong demand for money and reported outside purchases of gold for Russia. At the extreme close of business the tendency was dull. English railways were flat, chiefly on the prospect of a strike amongst the Yorkshire colliers. Caledonian, Lancashire and Yorkshire, and North British fell about 1 per cent. each, and most of the other lines ¼ to ½. South-Eastern A was comparatively steady, mainly owing to the satisfactory nature of the working statement just issued. A fresh rise of 4 per cent. occurred in Taff Vale. Dealings in the American section were very limited, and the variations unimportant. The tone at the last was dull, in response to New York prices. Grand Trunks gave way, particularly the First and Second Preferences, and a fresh collapse took place in Mexican (Vera Cruz) stocks. The Second Preference fell 2½ per cent.; the First, 1½; and the Ordinary, 1.

Consols were slightly worse, but Indian Three and Three and a Half per Cents. and Board of Works stocks were in request. Amongst foreign bonds the chief feature was the active demand for Peruvian Six per Cents., which rose 1½. The Five per Cents. were likewise up, as well as Argentine Hard Dollars, Ecuador, Greek, and Venezuelan. Egyptian, French, Hungarian, Italian, Mexican, Turkish of 1871, and Spanish, however, showed depression. The latter were prominently flat, and fell about ½. Some of the miscellaneous shares improved, including Hyderabad (Deccan) and South African Exploration. As regards mines, Kimberley Central were largely bought, and rose nearly 2. De Beers improved about 1, and there was an inquiry for Indian and South African gold securities.

French gold worth £33,000 was sent into the Bank.

The Orinoco, from the West Indies, has brought £22,600 in specie, and the Elbe has taken £32,204 for the Brazils.

Dealings in bar silver were limited, and the price remained at 43d per ounce. No alteration occurred in the Eastern exchanges. Bombay markets will be closed on Monday. Rupee Paper was ⅛ higher, at 71¼, ⅜ and 67¼, ⅜ for the Four and a Half and Four per Cents. respectively.

On the Continental Bourses variations were irregular. At Berlin Prussian Four per Cents., Egyptian Preference, Russian, Austrian Gold Rentes, and ditto Credit improved, but a decline occurred in Egyptian Unified, Turkish, Italian, Hungarian, and Mexican. Paris prices were flat, and Crédit Foncier, Suez Canal, Panama, Ottoman Bank, Rio Tinto, Spanish, Lombardo, and Portuguese receded. Greek, however, advanced. The exchange on London was 2c lower, at 25f 38½c.

Subscriptions are invited by Messrs. Baring Brothers and Co. for an Argentine Government Four and a Half per Cent. Internal Gold Loan for £3,933,580. Applications will also be received in Germany and France. The price of issue is 87 per cent., payable in instalments extending to December next. The first half-yearly coupon is due on March 1 next, and the bonds are redeemable at par in thirty-eight years, under the operation of an accumulative sinking fund of 1 per cent. per annum. Principal and interest, payable in the Republic in gold, will be collected by the Provincial Bank of Buenos Ayres, and be paid in London and on the Continent at fixed rates of exchange. The chief object of the present issue is to redeem certain Five per Cent. External loans. The subscription will be opened on Tuesday next, and closed on or before the following day at two p.m.

We have received the prospectus of the Excelsior Copper Company (Limited), an undertaking formed to acquire and work mines in Quebec, Canada. The prospectus states that the property consists of 4,100 acres of rich mineral land, comprising 2,800 acres freehold and 1,300 acres of mining rights. A contract has been entered into with Messrs. Vivian and Sons, of Swansea, to take the output of the mines, at the ruling price of copper in the Metal Exchange, up to one hundred tons of ore per day. The capital is £450,000, in £1 shares, of which 150,000 are now offered for subscription. The list will close on Wednesday next at ten a.m.

A prospectus has been circulated of the Callington United Mines (Limited), a company launched to acquire tin, copper, lead, and arsenic mines in Cornwall, formerly the property of the New Holmbush and New Redmoor Mining Companies. The working of these undertakings was stopped in 1886, owing, it is stated, to insufficient capital and the low price of metals. The capital is £100,000, in shares of £1 each, but the present issue is not more than £55,000.

Notice is given that the coupons due Nov. 1 on the issue of £280,000 Equipment Trust Bonds of £100 each of the New York, Pennsylvania, and Ohio Railroad Company will be paid on and after that date at the office of the London agency, Bucklersbury, E.C.

At a meeting of the directors of the Anglo-American Telegraph Company (Limited), held this day, it was resolved to declare an interim dividend, for the quarter ending Sept. 30 last, of 7s 6d per ct. on the Ordinary stock, and 15s per ct. on the Preferred, less income-tax, payable on Nov. 1 to the stockholders registered on the books of the company on Oct. 9.

The directors of the Direct United States Cable Company (Limited) have resolved to pay an interim dividend of 2s per share, free of income-tax, being at the rate of 2 per ct. per annum, for the quarter ending Sept. 30 last, payable on and after Oct. 24.

The receipts of the Cincinnati, Washington, and Baltimore Railway for the first week in October amounted to $45,460, or $4,100 less than in 1887. For the first week in October the approximate gross earnings of the Mexican Central Railway were $84,443, compared with $63,029 last year. On the Guadalajara line the receipts amounted to $8,013, and on the Salinas line to $2,277. According to a telegram received from Buenos Ayres, the approximate earnings of the Buenos Ayres and Pacific Railway for the week ended Oct. 7 were $22,500, with 426 miles open.

Out of the profits for the half-year ending June 30 last, the Mysore Gold Mining Company (Limited) have declared a dividend of 2s per share on the fully-paid shares and 1s on those with 10s paid, exclusive of the premium.

Subject to audit, the directors of the Cheltenham Original Brewery Company (Limited) will recommend a dividend on the ordinary shares at the rate of 8 per ct. per annum, for the half-year ending Sept. 30 last.

An official notification respecting the De Beers and Kimberley Central Mining Companies will be found in our advertising columns.

The directors of the London and Glasgow Engineering and Iron Ship-building Company (Limited) have appointed Mr. J. W. Shepherd, late manager of the Fairfield Ship-building Company, to be general manager, in place of Mr. D. Kinghorn, resigned.

Coupons due Nov. 1 on the debentures of the City of Melbourne Loan of 1885 (issued in 1886) for £150,000 will be paid by the National Bank of Australasia, Leadenhall-street.

It is intimated that the United Fire Reinsurance Company (Limited), of Manchester, has declared an interim dividend at the rate of 5 per ct. per annum, free of income-tax, for the six months ending June 30 last, payable on Oct. 15.

Messrs. Ayala and Co. announce that from June 1 last their Mr. Fernando Ayala, who since November, 1874, has had the management of their London establishment, has become full partner in their firm, both in Ay and London.

Subjoined is a copy of a cablegram received by the New Kusell Gold Mining Company (Limited) from their manager at the mines: "I have shipped 67 ounces (from old mill); new 40 stamp mill completed; will start next week; particulars by post."

It is notified by the Anglo-Mexican Mining Company (Limited) that the September output of silver amounted to $40,680.

The Anglo-Argentine Tramway receipts for the week ended Aug. 25 were £3,930, compared with £3,469 in 1887.

SPORTING INTELLIGENCE.

NEWMARKET NOTES.

There is always a satisfaction in singing the praises of Newmarket, and it can certainly be said with truth that the Second October Meeting was productive of some excellent sport. From beginning to end there was no slackness, and whereas at the outset a rough week seemed in store, the weather turned out most favourable, and even the rain which threatened on the last day kept off. To trainers, perhaps, a strong downpour would be a great boon, as the Heath is getting very hard, and without a change the fields must suffer during the Houghton. For fear of the shaking Sheen was not pulled out for the Newmarket Derby, which followed immediately upon the walk over of The Cob for the Challenge Whip, and Prince Soltykoff fell back upon a very inefficient substitute in Ravensthorpe. As Wise Man had not passed the veterinary examination, he ran for Sir Robert Jardine instead of Mr. Warren de la Rue, and the doubts concerning his ability to stay a mile and a half were answered in the negative. The pace set by Benburb had taken all the pull out of him at the Red Post, and from that point both succumbed easily to the gigantic Arrandale. Lord Cadogan kept up his reputation as a successful match-maker, and Franciscan, who had been nearly knocked down on Tuesday, won all the way. He would have experienced some trouble if he had caught Brooklyn in a generous vein, and the latter will require to behave himself differently in his match with Noble Chieftain at Derby next month. The conditions are: Noble Chieftain, 9st 7lb; Brooklyn, 8st; 500 aside, 100 ft, five furlongs. The Tyke followed up his success of the second day in the Fourth Welter Handicap, the path to victory being considerably smoothed by the currish exhibition of Whistle Jacket, who ran like a lion down the hill, and like a lamb afterwards. Mr. R. Peck ran his Kempton Park purchase of last Friday Ecstacy, in the Selling Plate for two-year-olds, over the last seven furlongs of the Rowley Mile, and secured the services of her original owner, Tom Cannon. The filly ran home a clever winner from Blood Royal and the Nadine colt, with Tally Ho, who started a hot favourite, finishing only in the middle of the ruck. Ecstacy was bought in for 490 guineas, which is "thirty" less than it cost Mr. Hammond to retain the quick-actioned Corbeille, after she had squandered a party of seven in the Selling Plate. The Prendergast Stakes had divided these affairs, and with El Dorado doing his work in much better style than on Monday, the Manton pair, Arquebus and Blue Peter, did not seriously trouble him. At the same time, the latter did not maintain the form that enabled him to beat Freemason and Emerald in a Maiden Plate earlier in the week. With Corbeille pointing to Lucy Long she was served up hot from Bret Harte for the Juvenile Handicap, scarcely any notice being taken of Ketta, who, upon 4lb worse terms, had raced Lucy Long to a head at Sandown Park. Mr. Deacon's filly did not exhibit much fire, and Ketta atoned for the unlucky disqualification on Monday by a head verdict from Bret Harte, who could not quite reach her. The nomination had been made for Ketta by Mr. Rothschild, and it was fortunate for Mr. Fenwick that the engagement was handed over to him. The curtain dropped with the Great Challenge Stakes, and those who were fond of Sandal for the Cambridgeshire ought not to have hesitated to bet odds with freedom when she was meeting Ormus at weight for age. Still, she looked like going down until the two-year-old partly "cut it," and although my opinion may be wrong, I do not think that Lord Calthorpe's filly will win the Cambridgeshire. During the afternoon a bet of 5000 to 1000 was booked to Mamia, and it then became possible to obtain 10 to 1 "bar one." There were plenty of inquiries for Ténébreuse and Lisbon, and a move was made on behalf of one of the Manton candidates, Heloise. Warne has been secured to ride Lisbon, and E. Martin Phil.

POLICE INTELLIGENCE.

MARLBOROUGH-STREET.—A PICCADILLY CARRIAGE THIEF.—Thomas Sullivan, a rough-looking young man, was brought up for attempted robbery in Piccadilly shortly before six o'clock yesterday evening.—The evidence was that as a brougham was proceeding along Piccadilly the prisoner, who was standing at the corner of Albemarle-street, ran by the side of it, and, putting his hand through the open window, endeavoured to snatch a purse from a lady who was seated inside. He did not succeed, however, and as the lady screamed the prisoner ran away, but was pursued and handed over to a constable by Mr. David Moss, who witnessed the affair.—The lady identified Sullivan, but declined to prosecute. The prisoner denied his guilt, and Sergeant Brewer, the gaoler, informed the magistrate that the accused had undergone three months' imprisonment as a rogue and vagabond, but not as a felon.—Mr. Newton passed sentence of two months' imprisonment, with hard labour.

WORSHIP-STREET.—THE EAST-END LODGING-HOUSES.—Mary Havies, 18, and James Fordham, 21, the latter with several aliases, were charged on remand before Mr. Montagu Williams with having been concerned with others not in custody in assaulting Carl Edwin Hellman, and robbing him of a pair of trousers and a sum of £4.—Mr. Phillips appeared to defend Fordham.—The prosecutor, a Scandinavian, who described himself as a student, met, whilst intoxicated, a woman, with whom he went to Flower and Dean-street, Spitalfields, and was taken by her into a common lodging-house there, where he paid 8d for a "double" bed. On being shown a room he found fault with the accommodation, and was left by the woman, and almost immediately afterwards was attacked by four or five men, who burst into the room, and seized him, throwing him on the bed and rifling his pockets of a purse containing £4 in gold, as well as stealing his trousers. It happened, however, that two police-constables had been informed of the fact of the man being taken to the house by women, and the officers remaining near the spot heard his cries, and entered the place just as he was thrown down the stairs. The room he had been in was searched, and in an adjoining apartment the prisoners were found in bed. The trousers and purse were also discovered there, and £2 10s was missed from the latter. Fordham denied having taken part in the assault on the prosecutor, who, however, identified him. The prosecutor also said that he paid the 8d for the bed to a woman (the deputy).—It was stated by the police that when they entered the house the deputy was not to be seen. The magistrate had ordered the police to produce her, and also desired to have some information as to the supervision of the common lodging-houses of the district.—Margaret Brown, a young woman, now deposed that she acted as "deputy" of the house in question, No. 34, Flower and Dean-street, erroneously stated last time by the witnesses to be 35. The house was owned by a Mr. Coates, who kept a chandler's shop in Dorset-street, and lived in Whitecross-street. Replying to the magistrate, the witness said there were nineteen "double" beds and seven "singles" in the place. She remembered letting in the female prisoner and a man—a foreigner—the latter paying 8d. for a double bed. Witness knew Fordham, whom she admitted at a quarter to one o'clock, or about ten minutes after the woman and the foreigner. She could not account for Fordham being afterwards found with the female prisoner in a "double" when he paid for a single bed. She had known him before, he having slept there about once a week for some time past. She did not know the other four men who attacked the prosecutor—there were no other men that she knew of up there. She had heard Hellman calling out, and went up when the prosecutor said the woman had robbed him. That was after the police were in the house. Witness went up with the police. She had sole charge of the place, and was paid 6s per week.—Police-constable Dennis, 57 H, recalled, said that when he entered the place the deputy was not to be seen. After going in a second time she came from the kitchen.—The witness explained that the "single" beds were undivided, and stood in rows in a large room, the "double" beds being in small rooms made by partitioning a large one. The partitions did not touch the floor or the ceiling, a space of about 18in. being left top and bottom. A person might pass from one "room" to another with a good squeeze.—Previous convictions were then proved against both prisoners. The man had been several times sentenced for felony, and the woman twice for cutting and wounding, her latest sentence being twelve months.—Police-sergeant 32 H said he had, with an inspector, to inspect the registered lodging-houses in the district. They were 127 in number—common lodging-houses, accommodating about 6,000 persons. They were all visited once a week on an average. The house 34, Flower and Dean-street had hitherto been a well-conducted house. Of course it was frequented by thieves and prostitutes. He (witness) doubted if a single registered lodging-house would be found without such people among its lodgers.—The magistrate having intimated that he should send the case for trial, Mr. Phillips said Fordham would reserve his defence.—The prosecutor was not in attendance, and it was stated that he was on the eve of sailing for America.—Mr. Williams remarked that he should chance the prosecutor being in attendance at the trial. If he was not, the judge would probably deal with the matter. He directed that the proceedings at the lodging-house in question be reported at Scotland-yard. The prisoners were then committed to the sessions.

THAMES.—THE BOW CEMETERY.—A gentleman applied to Mr. Lushington for advice respecting what he termed the "Bow Cemetery Scandal." He had petitioned the Home Secretary about the way in which the dead were placed in the ground, but no action had been taken in the matter. The cemetery authorities endeavoured to put the discredit on their late foreman, and stated that he had since been dismissed. Applicant had written to her Majesty on the subject, and had received a reply through her secretary. As the Home Secretary would do nothing, applicant wished to know whether, as a common informer, he could take action to recover penalties, for which the cemetery company were clearly liable.—Mr. Lushington, having read the correspondence which had passed between applicant and the Home Secretary, advised him to go again to the Home Office and lay the facts before the authorities there, as it was the duty of the Home Secretary to move in the matter.

WEST HAM.—A BENEVOLENT POLICEMAN.—Alfred Symonds, aged 14, a respectable-looking lad, described as of no home and no occupation, was charged with being found wandering in the Barking-road without visible means of subsistence.—Constable Threadwell said that at about midnight he was on duty in the Barking-road, when he saw the lad loitering about, and asked him why he was out at that time of night. He answered that he had nowhere to go to, and in reply to a further question, he said, "I've come from America. I've no father now, no mother, no sister, and no brother; no home, and I don't know anyone in England. Me and my father came on a barque from America, and on the voyage father was washed overboard and drowned. We arrived at Millwall the latter end of August, and I have been lying about under carts and wagons in the markets in London. I have not slept in a bed since I came off board ship, and I've only had one penn'orth of bread to eat since yesterday." Witness took the lad to a coffee-stall, gave him some coffee and cake, and then took him to the police-station, where he was charged. He ate the cake as if he was very hungry.—Prisoner: Please sir, can I go back to America?—Mr. Meeson: Yes, but we must communicate with the authorities first. You will now be remanded to the union for a week.

DEPARTURE OF THE AUSTRALIAN CRICKETERS.

The sixth Australian team of cricketers took their departure from London yesterday morning. S. P. Jones, Bannerman, J. M'C. Blackham, Edwards, Ferris, and Worrall left Fenchurch-street Station by the 11.13 train, and joined the steamer at Gravesend, while Boyle, Lyons, M'Donnell, and Jarvis journeyed to Tilbury, where the Orient steamer Cuzco (Captain Nixon) was timed to leave at one o'clock. Mr. C. W. Beal, the manager, who is somewhat indisposed, with Trott and Turner, left Paddington last night for Plymouth, where they will join their comrades. A large number of friends gathered on the Fenchurch-street platform, the visitors including ladies. Some journeyed to Tilbury, and, after inspecting the steamer, took their final farewell of the Colonists, hearty cheers being given on both sides.

BILLIARDS.

COOK v. M'NEIL.—The fifth stage of the spot-barred match between Cook and M'Neil, who play 9,000 up at the Aquarium, was remarkable yesterday for the form shown by the ex-champion, who throughout the day played in most brilliant style. Overnight the scores were: M'Neil, 6,302; Cook, 5,779; and not only did the last named rub off the deficit, but he wound up with a lead of 527 points. It must not be understood that M'Neil played badly; on the contrary, he was responsible for several very fine breaks, but he could not keep up anything like the pace that Cook set. Commencing with a break of 125 he went on with 54, 137, 72, 191, 56, 167, 95, and 123. M'Neil's best contributions were 68, 57, 86, 60, and 106. When hostilities ceased for the day the scores were—Cook, 7,350; M'Neil, 6,573. The match will be concluded to-day.

The first ordinary meeting of the 114th Session of the Medical Society of London will be held at 11, Chandos-street, Cavendish-square, W., on Monday evening. The Lettsomian Lectures will be delivered by Dr. William Richard Gowers in January and February, and the Annual Oration by Mr. Jonathan Hutchinson on May 6.

At the Liverpool Police-court, yesterday, Shem Marsden, assistant passenger guard on the London and North-Western Railway, pleaded guilty to the charge of stealing a large quantity of articles from passengers' luggage in transit, including jewellery and wearing apparel. A gold brooch was found on him when arrested. He was remanded, owners being wanted for a large number of articles.

A USEFUL HINT.—If British housekeepers, instead of purchasing the commonest of common matches, because they are low priced and thought to be cheap, would use none but matches bearing Bryant and May's name, they would not only get the best value for their money, but would enable Bryant and May to pay thousands of pounds more weekly in wages; and in that way the British housekeepers would be doing real good to the working classes of the East-end of London.—[ADVERTISEMENT.]

STOVES.—Comfortable Houses in Cold Weather.—Musgrave's Patent Ulster Stoves burn day and night the entire winter; maintain uniform pleasant warmth throughout the house; easily fixed; give no trouble, and cause no dust or unpleasant smell. Invaluable where there are invalids. Price lists free.—Musgrave and Co. (Ltd.), 97, New Bond-street, W.—[ADVT.]

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—These pills purify the blood and act most powerfully on the liver, stomach, kidneys, and bowels, thus giving tone, energy, and vigour to the whole system. They are wonderfully efficacious in all ailments incidental to females, young or old, and as a general family medicine for the cure of most complaints are unequalled.—[ADVERTISEMENT.]

MR. MORLEY AND MR. BALFOUR.

Mr. Morley has sent to a correspondent the following reply on the subject of the letter from Mr. Balfour on the Crimes Act:

"95, Elm Park-gardens, Oct. 12.

"My Dear Sir—Mr. Balfour's attempt to rescue Mr. Chamberlain from his unlucky challenge is a pure piece of mystification. Mr. Chamberlain said that every man who had been sent to prison under the Crimes Act had undoubtedly committed the offence with which he was charged, and had broken the law in the way in which he was said to have broken it. He defied any of us to point out a single case of a man who had suffered imprisonment under the Coercion Act who by the slightest possibility could have been supposed to be innocent of the crimes with which he was charged. I replied that Mr. Chamberlain's first proposition was absolutely incorrect, and I met his challenge by at once naming three cases in which a man suffered imprisonment for having broken the law in a way in which the Superior Court held there had been no legal proof that he had broken it. I took the first three that were prominent. I said that neither the Chief Secretary nor the Irish Solicitor would support Mr. Chamberlain's proposition. Nor will they. Mr. Balfour does not venture to support it now, and he does not venture to say a single word as to one of the three cases by which I met Mr. Chamberlain's challenge. There are a good many other cases, of which we shall hear more in discussing Estimates. But is David Barry's case, for instance, a good answer to the challenge, or is it not? If Mr. Balfour can declare that Mr. Chamberlain was accurate in his proposition, and that I was wrong in declaring it to be erroneous, I will give him leave to send me to Tullamore for a month, with or without hard labour.

"Now for the Miltown Malbay case. Mr. Balfour says I 'accepted Mr. Chamberlain's challenge, and pointed in triumph to the case' at Miltown Malbay. Ingenious, but a very hardy perversion of the fact. That case was not one of the three that I mentioned in reply to the challenge. I did accept the challenge, and I did point to Miltown Malbay, but they were two distinct and separate operations. Mr. Balfour himself says that it is 'not easy to see what Mr. Morley's case had to do with Mr. Chamberlain's challenge.' Certainly not; it had not, and it did not purport to have. Having nailed Mr. Chamberlain's bad contention firmly to the counter, I went on to the opinion so bluntly expressed by a Baron of Exchequer as to the judicial capacity of the Coercion Courts. I adduced the action of the Coercion Court at Miltown Malbay as an illustration of their animus and their judicial capacity. Does Mr. Balfour destroy the force of the illustration? On the contrary, he helps to drive my point home, for he tells us that on appeal the county court judge held that in four cases out of the five the Coercion Court had convicted without sufficient evidence, and that the convictions must be reversed. What better evidence could I desire? It is true that I had been misinformed as to the number of convictions; ten persons were charged, but only five were convicted. But five convictions are just as good for the purpose of my illustration as ten, nor can the fact that the sentence inflicted by the Coercion Court was not actually suffered affect our judgment of the conduct of the Court in convicting and passing a severe sentence on insufficient evidence. I think Mr. Balfour can hardly have read his secretary's letter very carefully before authorising its despatch, or else his acuteness would have detected the fatal absurdity of taking this case as the happiest possible illustration 'of the absence of all injustice in the administration of the Crimes Act.' How was injustice avoided here? Why, by means of an appeal. Mr. Balfour promised that there should be a right of appeal in all cases; he did not keep his promise. So, as it is, considering that in 567 cases of imprisonment out of 901 (down to Whitsuntide, the date of the last return) the sentence did not allow of an appeal, the security to which he now points as so infallibly effective simply does not exist at all. So much for my delightfully happy illustration of the absence of all possibility of injustice in the Coercion Courts. The case proves the very opposite of what Mr. Balfour would lead people to suppose. As for the circumstances antecedent to the trial, we shall have a better opportunity of testing whether Mr. Balfour's version or mine is more correct when Parliament meets.—Yours truly,

"JOHN MORLEY."

She was terribly injured. Chandlett ran away, but afterwards gave himself up to the police, to whom he said that he had murdered his wife. The woman was removed to the hospital, and remains there in a precarious condition.

METROPOLITAN BOARD OF WORKS.

The weekly meeting of the Metropolitan Board of Works was held yesterday at the offices, Spring-gardens, Lord Magheramorne presiding.

Several deputations waited on the board to advocate the proposed tramway extension from East Dulwich to Peckham, one representing the Camberwell Vestry, which had passed a resolution in favour of the scheme. The subject was reported to the Works Committee.

The Bishop of BEDFORD, who was formerly rector of Spitalfields, headed a deputation which memorialised the board to schedule the sites of Bell-lane and Pearl-street in Whitechapel, with a view to their being improved under the Artisans Dwellings Act. Amongst the members of the deputation were Mr. S. Montagu, M.P., and the Rev. Dr. Adler. The Bishop of Bedford drew attention to the fact that whilst, according to the last census, there were in England and Wales 70 inhabitants to each acre, in the Whitechapel district there were 176, in Spitalfields sub-district 286, and in the Bell-lane and Pearl-street areas 600 and 500 persons to the acre respectively. This density of population was necessarily injurious to the moral and physical well-being of the inhabitants.

The petition was referred to the Works and General Purposes Committee.

The Finance Committee recommended that cheques for £53 18s and £37 14s be drawn in favour of Mr. Meadows White, Q.C., and Mr. G. M. Freeman, for further fees as counsel for the Board before the Royal Commission.

Mr. COOK remarked that this was the last time that a subject of this kind would be brought before the Board.

Mr. EDWARDS, having protested against the briefing of counsel, said he would vote against the recommendation.

Mr. JUDGE remarked that he was opposed to the employment of counsel, but as they had been engaged they were entitled to payment. It was premature to say that this was the last time that the proceedings before the Royal Commission would come before the Board.

The recommendation was adopted by 24 votes to 7.

THE EMPEROR FREDERICK AND HIS DOCTORS.

SIR MORELL MACKENZIE'S BOOK.

The Central News professes to have obtained the full text of the most interesting portions of Sir Morell Mackenzie's forthcoming work. The volume, which will be published on Monday next, by Messrs. Sampson Low, Marston, Searle, and Rivington (Limited) is illustrated with diagrams and facsimile specimens of the late Emperor's handwriting, as well as valuable sketches showing the progress of the disease in the illustrious patient's throat.

In the course of his preface Sir Morell Mackenzie says: "It has been a painful task to me to write the following pages, not because there is anything in the charges recently brought against me by some of my German colleagues which I have the slightest difficulty in meeting, but because I feel most keenly the unseemliness of a controversy which must necessarily cause additional suffering to hearts which have already been tried beyond the common lot. Although the pamphlet issued from the Imperial press at Berlin embodies accusations which amount to a charge of malpractice, I should have been content, so far as I am personally concerned, to leave my professional reputation to the judgment of impartial men. Under the special circumstances of the case, however, I feel it to be a duty which I owe to those exalted persons who honoured me with their fullest confidence through thirteen months of terrible anxiety to justify the trust which they placed in me. Two things supported me in what otherwise would have been an intolerable position. First, my own consciousness of perfect integrity of purpose. Secondly, the absolute trust and delicate consideration with which, from first to last, I was treated by my noble-hearted patient. No physician could wish for a patient more obedient to his injunctions, more full of 'sweet reasonableness,' than the ruler of the mighty empire of Germany. I have been unable, for obvious reasons, to allude to several points which, though not bearing on the purely medical aspect of the case, were yet most important factors in determining the course which was pursued. I think I have also some grounds of complaint against the Prussian Government, which, whilst allowing my adversaries free access to the State archives, refused me the same privilege. As I have shown in the body of this little work, these 'official sources' are of a very miscellaneous character; but among them there are important documents relating to the case of the late Emperor which, in justice to me, should not have been kept from the public. Amongst others may be mentioned the protocols of Professor von Schrötter, Dr. Krause, and myself drawn up in November, 1887, and more especially the written refusal of the Emperor (then Crown Prince) to submit to any other external operation than tracheotomy. The protocols which it is proved that Professors Gerhardt and Von Bergmann sent in to the Haus-Ministerium would also furnish interesting reading, and would show what really were the views of these gentlemen before I was summoned to Berlin. The first report of Professor Virchow would also be highly instructive. I can only hope that these documents and other matters bearing on this historical case will some day be made public. I at least have no reason to fear the full light of day."

The book commences with a deeply-interesting historical account of Sir Morell Mackenzie's connection with the case.

"On the evening of Wednesday, May 18, 1887 (says Sir Morell), as I was about to retire to rest, after a day of hard professional work, I received a message requesting me to proceed to Berlin to see his Imperial Highness the Crown Prince of Germany. I started the next morning, and reached Berlin on Friday, May 20, being met by Dr. Wegner. We drove at once to the Kron Prinz Palais. I had scarcely time to change my travelling clothes before the Hof Marschall, Count Radolinski, came to conduct me to the Crown Prince, who received me most graciously, apologising, with the charming bonhomie which endeared him to all who knew him, for all the trouble which his throat was causing to other people, and in particular for the long and fatiguing journey. Thereupon I was taken to another room, where I found the following physicians and surgeons assembled: Professors Gerhardt, Von Bergmann, and Tobold, Dr. von Laur, Physician in Ordinary to the aged Emperor, and Medical Director-General in the German Army; Dr. Wegner, whom I have already mentioned; and Dr. Schrader, another military surgeon, who occasionally acted as Dr. Wegner's deputy in attending the Imperial family. With Professor Gerhardt I was already personally acquainted, and he was known to me professionally as a physician who, in the midst of his labours in other departments of medical science, had found time to give some attention to diseases of the throat. Professor Von Bergmann I had heard of in connection with the Servian and Russo-Turkish wars, and I knew that he had been called from St. Petersburg to take the chair of Surgery at Berlin, after it had been declined by Professor Billroth of Vienna and Professor Volkmann of Halle, to whom it had previously been offered. I had never, however, seen him mentioned in laryngological literature save as a somewhat unfortunate operator in a few cases of extirpation of the larynx. Professor Tobold's name had at one time been familiar to me as that of one of the earliest throat physicians in Germany. But in the development of the specialty he had dropped almost entirely out of notice, and had grown to be little more than a nominis umbra to the present generation of practitioners. I confess that I felt some surprise that among those with whom I was invited to take counsel in a case of such importance there was not at least one of the leading German specialists in throat disease.

"Every laryngologist could without any difficulty name several men in Germany whose reputation is not confined to their own country. Their absence here seemed to me so significant that I rather hastily concluded that the august patient must be suffering from some obscure disease, of which the laryngeal affection was only an accidental complication. Wegner and Gerhardt gave me a history of the case, and I then examined the Crown Prince. When I had made my examination the other doctors and I withdrew in the ordinary way to discuss the matter. Professors Gerhardt and Tobold gave a positive opinion that the disease was cancerous, and Professor von Bergmann, though expressing himself more guardedly, substantially agreed with them. All three were unanimous in thinking that a cutting operation from the outside would be necessary for the removal of the growth; the precise nature of the surgical procedure that would be required was never, however, discussed in my presence. In fact, our consultations never reached the stage at which that question would have come up for consideration. When it came to my turn to speak I said that 'there was nothing characteristic in the appearance of the growth, and that it was quite impossible to give a definite opinion as to its nature without a more searching examination.' I pointed out that the opinion expressed by my colleagues had been come to on what seemed to me to be insufficient grounds, and that they had omitted the most essential, and at the same time the most obvious, means of arriving at a correct diagnosis. The first thing to be done was to pick off a piece of the growth through the natural passage and have it examined microscopically by an expert. Professor Gerhardt said it would be difficult, if not impossible, to do this, on account of the awkward situation of the growth, and Professor Tobold expressed a similar opinion. Whilst freely admitting that the operation in this case presented exceptional difficulties, I said that I thought it could be done, and that at any rate it should be attempted. I then turned to Professor Gerhardt and said to him, 'Will you try?' He replied, 'I cannot operate with forceps.' I then asked Professor Tobold if he would make the attempt, but he also declined, saying, 'I no longer operate.'

"These replies increased the surprise which I already felt at a case of such a nature having been entrusted to the hands of these gentlemen, for a throat specialist who cannot use the stethoscope is like a carpenter who cannot handle a saw." Early the following morning (May 2) Sir Morell performed his first operation in the Palace, all the doctors being present. "The Princesses drove home, but I had the privilege of walking back to Potsdam with the Crown Prince, who took the opportunity to speak to me very seriously as to his condition. He told me that a friend (he did not mention whether it was a lady or a gentleman) met him at Ems and said to him: 'I was going to call on you, for I am grieved to hear that Gerhardt says you have cancer.' His Imperial Highness asked me if I did not think Professor Gerhardt had done wrong in sending him to Ems if he believed him to be suffering from cancer. I replied that I had assuredly never heard of the Ems water doing good in a case of cancer, but I ventured to suggest that possibly the physician had been misrepresented. His Imperial Highness seemed extremely dissatisfied with Gerhardt, not only for his indiscretion in talking about the case, but for having sent him to Ems, though believing him to be suffering from malignant disease. Before returning to England I learned on unimpeachable authority certain facts as to Professor Gerhardt's previous treatment of the case which made me feel more anxious about the future than I had up till then seen any reason to be. I have already said that the professor himself had touched on the matter very lightly in my presence, and when he mentioned in general terms that he had used the galvano-cautery I naturally understood him to mean that he had employed this powerful agent according to the recognised rules of surgical practice. When, therefore, I was informed that he had applied the red-hot point to the interior of the larynx every day for nearly a fortnight, I could hardly bring myself to believe it. In all my experience I had never heard of any one applying the cautery to a patient's larynx oftener than once, or at most twice, a week; and I hardly know which to be most astonished at in the present instance, the therapeutic energy of the physician or the endurance of the patient.

"I do not hesitate to say that the treatment adopted by Professor Gerhardt was at once unscientific and injudicious. He cannot escape from the dilemma. Either his treatment was too thorough or it was not thorough enough. If he believed the growth to be benign, the repeated burning to which he subjected it was barbarous; if, as he says, he was doubtful as to its nature, that very doubt should have stayed his hand, and have led him to invoke surgical aid much sooner than he did. On twelve consecutive days, according to his own admission, did this physician burn the Crown Prince's larynx with a red-hot wire, and again on four subsequent occasions at short intervals. Finally, as if all this were not enough, he thought it necessary to sear the edge of the vocal cord with a flat burner. There is no record in medical literature, so far as I am aware, in which the cautery—a most valuable agent if properly handled—was so terribly misused.

"To sum up, if the growth was benign in the first instance, there is, in my opinion, only too much reason to think that Gerhardt's burning must be held answerable for its subsequent transformation into cancer. If it was malignant from the first, the disease was undoubtedly aggravated by the treatment.

"Shortly before their Royal Highnesses left England I thought it my duty to lay before the Crown Princess my views as to the prospects of her august consort. I told her Imperial Highness frankly that, although at that time the affection did not seem to me to be of a malignant nature, it might nevertheless turn out to be so. I impressed upon her Imperial Highness that, although at that moment everything looked most promising, the possibility of an eventual unfavourable development must not be ignored. That I laid my views before the Princess in the most frank and complete way I have documentary evidence to prove, and I am quite ready to place this evidence before the President of the College of Physicians and the German Ambassador acting together.

"With the Crown Prince himself I, of course, could not discuss the situation with the same freedom. Whilst encouraging him as to his condition, I was careful not to say anything of a misleading character.

"Hovell once observed to the Crown Prince, 'I can see that Dr. Bramann is not accustomed to use the laryngoscope.' 'Yes,' said his Imperial Highness, 'you can see it, and I can feel it.'

"On the morning of Nov. 6 I examined the Crown Prince's throat, which I found in exactly the same condition described in the reports. The mucous membrane over the left arytenoid cartilage was moderately œdematous, and of a bright pink colour. The new growth was bright red in colour, rather more prominent in the centre than elsewhere, and ulcerated on the surface. Its appearance was altogether unlike that of the one which I had destroyed, and the other swellings which had from time to time shown themselves in the larynx; it had, in fact, a distinctly malignant look.

"Without rising from my chair I informed his Imperial Highness that a very unfavourable change had taken place in his throat. He said, 'Is it cancer?' to which I replied, 'I am sorry to say, sir, it looks very much like it, but it is impossible to be certain.' I felt that evasive answers, which for the patient's own sake medical men are often compelled to give under similar circumstances, would in the present instance have been out of place.

"The Crown Prince received the communication with perfect calmness. After a moment of silence he grasped my hand and said, with that smile of peculiar sweetness which so well expressed the mingled gentleness and strength of his character, 'I have lately been fearing something of this sort. I thank you, Sir Morell, for being so frank with me.' In all my long experience I have never seen a man bear himself under similar circumstances with such unaffected heroism. He showed not the least signs of depression, but spent the day in his ordinary occupations, and at dinner time that evening he was cheerful without apparent effort, and chatted freely in his usual manner. At my request, therefore, Professor von Schrotter and Dr. Krause were summoned to San Remo. On Nov. 9 a preliminary meeting took place in my room at the Hôtel Méditerranée, Professor von Schrotter, Dr. Schrader, Dr. Krause, Mr. Hovell, and myself being present. I gave an account of the case from the time I first had seen the Crown Prince in May till the day I took leave of his Imperial Highness at Baveno in October. Mr. Hovell then related the subsequent progress of the case from that time up to the date of our meeting. I then described the appearance of the new growth, as I had first seen it on Nov. 6, and concluded by saying, 'This growth looks like cancer.' Professor von Schrötter thereupon said that, after my very clear statement, he had no hesitation in pronouncing the disease to be cancer; he was so sure of it that he felt there was no need for him to see the patient. Whilst thanking the Professor for this flattering testimony to my descriptive powers, I ventured to point out that it was hardly worth his while to have come all the way from Vienna to give it, and I hinted that it would scarcely be treating the illustrious patient with proper consideration to offer him a secondhand diagnosis. Professor von Schrötter then consented to go with us to the Villa Zirio, where the Crown Prince's throat was duly examined. Upon returning to the hotel to continue the consultation Professor von Schrötter wished to dictate a report ex cathedrâ, but as there was some divergence of opinion between him, Dr. Krause, and myself, it was agreed that each should give his opinion separately in writing. Schrötter affirmed that the disease was cancer, and recommended excision of the entire larynx. Dr. Krause remarked that it appeared to him that it was highly probable that the disease was a 'malignant neoplasm,' but as the view of the interior of the larynx was almost completely shut out by œdema, he would be glad to know whether iodide of potassium had been administered with the object of clearing up the diagnosis by the exclusion of the presence of any chronic disease. In my protocol I stated that, in my opinion, the disease was cancer, pointing out, however, that, in the absence of microscopic evidence, such a diagnosis could not be made with certainty. I therefore recommended that as soon as the œdema had disappeared a small piece of the new growth should be removed through the mouth and submitted to Professor Virchow, on whose report as to its nature any future course of action should be based. Dr. Schmidt put forward very strongly the idea that the disease might be the result of an infection which had remained in the system for many years, and urged that large doses of iodide of potassium should be given. Professor von Schrötter here interrupted Dr. Schmidt rather warmly, saying that such a notion was 'an old wife's tale' (altes Weiber geschwätz).

Sir Morell Mackenzie then describes the famous operation of tracheotomy performed upon the Crown Prince at San Remo.

"When everything was ready the Crown Prince passed through an adjoining room into his ordinary sitting room, where it was arranged the operation should be performed. The bed was placed opposite one of the windows, so that there was an excellent light. Bramann proceeded to give chloroform, but as soon as the Crown Prince became unconscious the administration was continued by Dr. Krause, whilst I kept my finger upon the pulse at the left wrist. Shortly after Dr. Bramann had made his first incision I noticed that the pulse had become very weak, and the face was blanched—in fact, there were evident signs of cardiac weakness. On raising the eyelid the pupil was seen to be widely dilated. The chloroform was suspended for a minute or two, when the pulse became fairly good again, and the operation was proceeded with. After this incident Dr. Bramann seemed to become a little flurried, though not to such an extent as to prevent him from operating with skill. In opening the windpipe I noticed that he made his incision a little to the right instead of in the middle line. The deviation appeared to me so slight at the time that I attached no importance to it. After opening the trachea, instead of at once plunging in the cannula, as is usually done by English surgeons, Bramann held aside the two sides of the wound for a minute or two, until the bleeding had ceased, and then inserted a very large, long, and somewhat funnel-shaped tube. I will frankly own that the delay in introducing the cannula seemed to me an improvement on the ordinary plan of plunging the tube into the windpipe as soon as it is opened, a proceeding which usually sets up severe spasms and cough. When the operation was completed I congratulated Dr. Bramann on his success. I have already said that in a case like the Crown Prince's tracheotomy is not as a rule a matter of any difficulty; but considering that the young surgeon was operating on his future Sovereign, and that he was not unnaturally somewhat unnerved by the catastrophe so nearly caused by the chloroform, I think he did his work very well. On leaving the room I said to Mr. Hovell, 'Did you notice that the trachea was opened a little to the right of the middle line?' and that gentleman replied, 'I did; but I should say considerably rather than a little.'

"On coming to himself the illustrious patient shook hands warmly with Dr. Bramann, myself, and, I believe, the other doctors.

"At Leipzig, Prince Bismarck and several of the great State officials paid their respects to the new Emperor. After his audience with his Majesty, the Chancellor expressed a desire to have some conversation with me, and I accordingly travelled in the same carriage with him to the next station.

"Prince Bismarck said he was most anxious that the Emperor should be spared all unnecessary fatigue, and requested me to lay down rules as to the number of interviews which his Majesty might safely grant each day, the duration of such interview, &c. I informed the Chancellor that I had already drawn up some rules of the kind, which I had given to the Staff-Marshal. Prince Bismarck further said he would be glad to assist me in every way to save the august patient all worry and fatigue, adding that until the foreign Princes arrived to be present at the Emperor William's funeral his Majesty could remain perfectly quiet."

Sir Morell Mackenzie then proceeds to give in detail what occurred on "that fatal day," the 12th of April. The Emperor during the night became much worse, and Sir Morell resolved to insert a new tube. He goes on to say: "As the tube which I now proposed to try was different in shape from any of those which had been used since the case had been formally given up to me by Professor von Bergmann at San Remo, I thought that professional courtesy required that I should ask him to be present on the occasion. As I intended to do whatever was necessary with my own hands, there was really no need for the assistance of a surgeon; but it is an elementary rule of civilised medical practice that all those associated together in the management of a case should be made acquainted with the details of the treatment that is carried out. As soon as the new tube was ready, therefore, I despatched a messenger to Professor von Bergmann, to request him to come to me as soon as possible, meaning, of course, that I was anxious to proceed to change the tube without delay.

"In sending off that message little did I think it would have such fatal consequences. It is no exaggeration to say that these hastily scribbled lines proved to be the death-warrant of the Emperor. Had I had the slightest idea of what was to follow I should certainly not have allowed any over-punctilious notions of etiquette to mislead me into taking so disastrous a step. At the moment, however, it appeared to be the right thing to do. The Emperor, on his accession to the throne, had appointed Professor von Bergmann to be one of his medical attendants, no doubt in deference to public opinion in Germany, and I had been repeatedly and urgently requested by the Chief Officer of his Majesty's Household, Prince Radolin, to endeavour to work harmoniously with Von Bergmann, who, Prince Radolin assured me, was 'greatly trusted by the official classes.' Hence my anxiety that there should be no ground for complaint, so far as I was concerned, of any violation of the decencies of professional intercourse.

"It was five o'clock in the afternoon before Professor von Bergmann arrived. As soon as he came into my room I noticed that he was in a state of great excitement. Whether this agitation was due to exaggerated reports which he may have received as to the Emperor's condition, or to causes of a more personal nature I am unable to say; but, either from over-excitement or from some other cause, Bergmann behaved in a most extraordinary, indeed altogether unaccountable, manner.

"I briefly explained the circumstances, and showed him the tubes which I had got ready, though Bergmann seemed in too great a hurry to be able to listen attentively. We then proceeded to the Emperor's room, accompanied by Mr. Hovell, each of us carrying several tubes. We found the Emperor engaged in writing. The inspiration was distinctly audible; but, beyond this, there was not the slightest indication of any difficulty in breathing. Professor von Bergmann placed a chair opposite the window, and asked the Emperor to sit down upon it, and thereupon, without making any remark, he quickly undid the tape which kept the cannula in position, pulled the latter out, and with considerable force endeavoured to insert one which he had in his hand, and which was not provided with a pilot. The instrument was forced into the neck, but no air came through it. The Emperor's breathing thereupon became very much embarrassed, and the professor withdrew the tube. This was followed by a violent fit of coughing, and there was considerable hæmorrhage. Professor von Bergmann next seized a tampon-cannula covered with sponge, cut the sponge quickly off, and tried to push the tube into the windpipe. Again no air came through the cannula, and it was clear that instead of entering the air passage it had been forced downwards in front of the trachea, ploughing up the soft tissues in that situation and making what is technically known as a 'false passage.' Again the Professor had to pull out the tube, and again its withdrawal was followed by violent coughing, and streams of blood. To my dismay, Professor von Bergmann then pushed his finger deeply into the wound, and on withdrawing it tried to insert another tube; he again failed, however, and again the attempt was followed, as before, by most distressing coughing and copious bleeding. Professor von Bergmann then asked that his assistant, who was waiting in his carriage outside, might be sent for. It seemed as if he contemplated doing some further operation, perhaps enlarging the wound, but the Emperor was saved any further torture by the arrival of Dr. Bramann on the scene. Professor von Bergmann at once yielded the case into the hands of his assistant, and the young surgeon, taking a moderate-sized cannula (No. 8, German measure), passed it with the greatest ease into the trachea. There had, indeed, never been any difficulty in introducing the cannula. I had inserted a tube in the presence of my colleagues, Drs. Wegner and Krause, at ten o'clock that morning, and I subsequently took it out and substituted another for it. Although both these tubes had passed quite freely and without causing either coughing or bleeding, neither of them was altogether satisfactory, and other cannulas had therefore to be procured. The Emperor coughed almost incessantly, and continued to lose much blood for two hours after Bergmann's abortive struggles with the tube; the severity of the symptoms then began to diminish, but there was still a deal of coughing, with some hæmorrhage at intervals, till his Majesty went to bed. Half an hour after the professor's departure the Emperor sent for me and asked, 'Why did Bergmann put his finger into my throat?' His Majesty then went on to say, 'I hope you will not allow Professor von Bergmann to do any further operations on me.' I answered, 'After what I have seen to-day, sir, I beg most respectfully to say that I can no longer have the honour of continuing in attendance upon your Imperial Highness if Professor von Bergmann is to be permitted to touch your throat again.' Bergmann's roughness was never forgotten by the Emperor, although the nobility of his nature prevented him from showing any resentment, or even for bearing that awkward operator any ill-will. That Von Bergmann should have been under the impression that the Emperor felt grateful to him because Bramann inserted the tube, and that his Majesty should have indicated his satisfaction by 'a joyful motion of his hand' and by 'a thankful shaking of our (Bergmann's and Bramann's) hands,' is, indeed, remarkable, and would tend to show that Von Bergmann was not at the time in a condition to observe things accurately. The Emperor often referred afterwards to Bergmann's roughness, and unimpeachable testimony remains as to the opinion of his Majesty on the subject in his own handwriting, three days before his lamented death. I have not been permitted to reproduce this autograph, but I shall be happy to show it to any one who has a legitimate claim to inspect it. The means of testing the truth when Von Bergmann and I make opposite statements may not always be present; but here at least is a touchstone of Von Bergmann's veracity. Von Bergmann says that the Emperor 'thankfully shook his hands.' The illustrious patient's own handwriting, on the contrary, shows that he was by no means satisfied with his treatment by Bergmann.

In view of the serious aspect which the case was assuming, I thought it right to inform the Emperor that he was in a position of considerable danger, and I ventured to hint to his Majesty that if he had any affairs to settle, it would be advisable for him to do so now. The Emperor received this communication with his usual perfect calmness and shook me warmly but gravely by the hand, saying slowly: 'I am much obliged to you for telling me. I hope I shall get better for the sake of my people.' I noticed that his Majesty made a slight pause after the word 'better,' as if he were thinking aloud. At that moment Frederick the Noble was no doubt thinking of the enlightened and far-reaching schemes for the internal development of Germany which had been maturing in his mind through all those years of conscientious preparation for his great office. The regret for his uselessness of it all was not for himself, but for his people, who were to lose the blessing of his wise and beneficent rule almost before they had learned to appreciate it.

"I have said more than once that Frederick the Noble was the most considerate of men, and I cannot forbear relating a striking instance of this quality which occurred within a few hours of his death. My sitting-room was close to his Majesty's room, but in order to reach the latter I had to pass through three rooms. In order to get to his bed-room more quickly I generally used to go along an outside balcony, so that I had only the ante-room to pass through. Just before daybreak on the morning of June 15 it was dull and chilly. In consequence, I suppose, of exposure to the air in going by the balcony I became a little asthmatic. Whilst I was changing his cannula on two or three occasions during the night the Emperor put his hand lightly on my chest and looked up at me with a glance of earnest sympathy, thus mutely expressing his regret that I, too, was suffering. Those who have much to do with the sick know well how prolonged illness often breaks down the natural framework of the character, making even those who in health were utterly unselfish come to be regardless of anything but their own suffering. Frederick the Noble in this, as in everything else, rose above the ordinary standard of humanity. Even in the agony of death he remained true to his own generous nature.

"After the Emperor's death, having had no rest for nearly sixty hours, I threw myself on my bed about two p.m.; but I was shortly afterwards awakened by one of the adjutants, who informed me that the Emperor and Prince von Bismarck desired to see me. I quickly arose, and accompanied this gentleman to the young Monarch, whom I found sitting with the Chancellor in what had previously been the Adjutant's room. His Majesty received me courteously, and said that Prince Bismarck would like to speak with me. The Chancellor thereupon invited me to retire with him into an inner room, where he suggested that I should draw up a brief report on the case of Emperor Frederick. I at once expressed my readiness to do so. The Chancellor then said, 'Will you do so before you leave?' I replied, 'Willingly, your Highness. I shall leave on Monday, and I will certainly draw up the document you ask for before then.' After this conversation I was extremely surprised the next day when an official from the Haus-Ministerium called on me at one o'clock and asked me for my report. I told him I had not had time to draw it up. He said, 'If you will dictate it for me I shall be happy to take it down.' But I pointed out that such an important document could not be dashed off in that way. The official then remarked that it was most important it should be prepared immediately, as the Ministers were waiting for it. I then said, 'In that case I will write it for you,' and it was arranged that he should wait in the Palace for the document. Within half an hour I drew up a report to the following effect:

"'Schloss Friedrichskron, June 16, 1888.

"'It is my opinion that the disease from which the Emperor Friedrich III. died was cancer. The morbid process probably commenced in the deeper tissues, and the cartilaginous structure of the larynx became affected at a very early date. A small growth which was present when I first examined the late Emperor was removed by me by several endolaryngeal operations, and though all the portions taken away were submitted to Professor Virchow, he was unable to detect in them any evidence of the existence of cancer. Examinations of the sputa made at the beginning of March by Professor Waldeyer, however, led that pathologist to believe that cancer was then present. Whether the disease was originally cancerous or assumed a malignant character some months after its first appearance it is impossible to state. The fact that perichondritis and caries of the cartilages played an active part in the development of the disease, no doubt largely contributed to make it impossible to form a decided opinion as to its nature till quite recently. (Signed)

"'MORELL MACKENZIE.'

"When I proceeded to find the official I was surprised to discover him in earnest conference with Professor von Bergmann. I handed him the report, and withdrew. Half-an-hour later Dr. von Wegner looked in on me in my sitting room and said, 'A post-mortem is going to be made. Do you care to come?' I answered, 'Do I care to come! How can you ask such a question?' I immediately called Mr. Hovell, and went with him to the room where the autopsy was going to be performed."

The remaining sections of the book are devoted to controversies on surgical points and to statistics respecting serious operations on the throat. Sir Morell Mackenzie comments very severely upon the charges brought against him by Professor Gerhardt, and describes them as infamous. In regard to the particular charge that Sir Morell designedly extracted pieces of healthy vocal chord, Sir Morell states that on every occasion that any tissue was removed by him from the patient's larynx it was at once submitted to Professor Virchow. Sir Morell adds that that eminent pathologist pronounced every fragment examined by him to be unquestionably diseased. As to Professor von Bergmann's report, Sir Morell remarks that it consists, first, of "a narrative of facts which does more credit to his imagination than to his memory; secondly, of complaints of the scandalous injustice of newspapers supposed to be inspired by me, and denials of responsibility for the still more outrageous utterances of papers supposed to be inspired by him; and, thirdly, miscellaneous polemics on more or less irrelevant topics."

Sir Morell puts in parallel columns the advantages and disadvantages of the palliative treatment and the radical treatment. With the palliative treatment (including tracheotomy) life is preserved under almost normal conditions for at least one year, and (in a less favourable state) for at least one year longer—i.e., altogether for two years. With the radical treatment (thyrotomy) life is sacrificed at once as the result of the operation in 27·2 per cent. of cases, whilst in over 54·54 per cent. death is hastened owing to the greater activity of the morbid process set up by the operation, and in these cases the condition of existence is rendered less favourable by the premature use of a tracheotomy tube necessitated by unsuccessful thyrotomy. A complete cure has been twice obtained, or 9·09 per cent. These two are the only successful cases which are known to have followed the operation of thyrotomy. Of thirty-five operations for partial extirpation of the larynx, fifteen proved fatal; that is, 42·85 per cent. In regard to total extirpation of the larynx, this operation, when not immediately fatal, leaves the patient in a state of abject misery.

TO THE EDITOR OF "THE DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR—With reference to the notices which have appeared in many of to-day's papers (including The Daily Telegraph) of what assumes to be a review of this work from the British Medical Journal, we trust you will do us the favour of permitting us to state most positively that not a single copy or proof-sheet has been supplied by us to any one but the author himself and the foreign publishers; it may, therefore, be confidently asserted that this article, which purports to be a review, can only be a sort of compilation, put together as the result of outside gossip. We ourselves have kept faith absolutely with all with whom we have been concerned in this business, and we are informed by Sir Morell Mackenzie that he was himself as much surprised and annoyed as we were to see the articles in the papers this morning. It is clear, therefore, that had there been a grain of fact in the article it must have been obtained by some surreptitious means; and Sir Morell is not less chagrined than we are that the editor should have availed himself of any such underhand methods. We may add that the fac-similes with which you and other papers have been supplied by the editor do not appear in our book; one of them having been specially suppressed by the author at the request of a high authority. We think it therefore due to ourselves and the author that it should be as widely made known as possible that what has appeared can in no sense be regarded as a review of the actual book, but only as an attempt on the part of a well-known medical journal to obtain for itself a momentary reputation by exceedingly sharp practice not, one would have thought, in accord with the dignity of its position in the journalistic world.—We are, Sir, yours obediently,

SAMPSON LOW, MARSTON, SEARLE, and RIVINGTON (Limited).

London, Oct. 12.

The Central News Agency has received a communication from Sir Morell Mackenzie stating that the review in the British Medical Journal was an entire surprise to him, and he regrets very much that proofs of his book should have been obtained and used before the publication of the work, which will be on Monday. The fac-simile reproductions were of writing handed to Sir Morell by the Emperor three days before his death. The slip of paper containing the writing was photographed by a gentleman whom he deems to be an honourable man, and had also been in the hands of two or three other persons, who are, he believes, trustworthy. How the editor of the British Medical Journal became possessed of a copy Sir Morell is at a loss to understand.

AMERICANS "AT HOME."

[FROM OUR NEW YORK CORRESPONDENT.]

The corner in wheat is the most exciting topic of the moment. A Chicago broker named Hutchinson is the author of it. He is best known on the markets as "Old Hutch." Previously when this kind of operation has been attempted, the farmers at the point of apparent success would come forward with more grain, and the corner would be broken; but on this occasion Hutchinson has pushed the price up so gradually that the farmers have been tempted to sell right along, so that "Old Hutch" has had his own way. It is allowed on all hands that he has "made the corner" with singular skill and foresight. The farmers have no wheat left, and he is thus master of the situation. During the past few days Chicago operators have made a big effort to ease the market, but without avail. On one day 750,000 bushels of October wheat "passed around" on the floor, but the grain belonged to Hutchinson. There was a perfect craze to buy, which caused prices to go up rapidly. Then followed a reaction, which was again followed by an advance more sensational than the first; and each day may be said to develop similar incidents. Flour is now $1 50c higher in price than it was last October, and bread has again advanced. The cost of a loaf, should the upward movement continue, will not be allowed to rest with the bakers, who have held meetings upon the subject, but as yet without any special result. Meanwhile "Old Hutch" is triumphant, and even serious politicians do not quite admit the feasibility of making laws against "corners" in wheat.

There is some slight decrease in the number of yellow fever victims, but the epidemic continues to be serious. Within the past week, however, it is milder in its attacks. The weather has been cold, with heavy frosts, as far south as Virginia, and numerous snowstorms are reported from the mountainous parts of the country; but the cold weather, which has reached Jacksonville, being unaccompanied by frost, has had a bad rather than a good influence on the cases reported from that city. There seems to be no immunity in physique or acclimatisation from this fell disease. A nurse who has been through four sieges of yellow fever was attacked with the disease last night, and there are other similar cases of both men and women, who might have been considered proof against it, being fatally afflicted. The epidemic, apart from the great loss of life, will seriously hurt the South financially, the Northern people who had begun to buy property throughout the district now looking elsewhere for investments. It will take the South more years to recover from the effects of the fever than the epidemic has occupied weeks.

The political campaign is devoid of colour and excitement. There are the usual flags and banners, but they flap "idly in the air," and nobody heeds them. Such torchlight processions as there are creep along the streets as if with a sense of their moral feebleness. One has been accustomed to see the fiery parades go on late into the night, accompanied by cheerful and encouraging shouts. The election is a foregone conclusion. One man in this State has put up $500,000 in certified drafts as a bet on Cleveland, but without any response from the other side. It has been left to California to signalise the contest with its one sensational incident, which took the sanguinary form of a fatal fight in the Republican Commercial Rooms at San Francisco. A Republican inspector of elections was killed, and two of his assistants were seriously wounded. The fight was the outcome of the intrigues of a local Democratic leader known as "Boss Buckley." Occasionally he is called "Blind Buckley"—not in derision, for he is blind, and is a power in spite of this disability. Buckley is a political type of Western civilisation. He could not exist as an individual factor in English politics. He is a rough, coarse man, but with enormous energy. A clever and cunning tactician, he looks the singular part he plays. Tall, with a fine muscular figure, he dresses neatly and in black broadcloth. His face is large and clean shaven, his complexion deadly pale, and his dark unseeing eyes are always wide open, with a peculiar far-away look in them that gives to their expression a strange fascination. A curious story is told of Buckley's family. In the early days of the City of the Golden Gate one of his brothers was hanged for stealing a horse. On the day that he suffered another brother was executed for murder. These few personal details will enable you the better to understand the fight which brings Boss Buckley's record up to the present moment. It was the dénouement of a plan deeply laid by Buckley to beat the Republicans in the city election. To accomplish this he had established what he called independent Republican clubs, at the head of which he placed uncompromising Democrats. When the municipal election took place, last week, Buckley found there was a great increase in the Republican vote. He therefore ordered his men to steal the ballot-boxes and destroy a portion of the Republican tickets. The struggle between the loyal Republicans and Buckley's men for the possession of the ballot-boxes resulted in one dead and several wounded. This kind of incident is, I regret to say, by no means uncommon on this side of the Atlantic.

This season's race meetings have brought into prominence a new jockey, and, what is surprising, he is a mulatto. Coloured jockeys in the South are not at all uncommon, but as a rule they are not favourites, for they easily lose their heads, and they are so accustomed to being pushed aside or ignored that they do not hold their own well among white jockeys. Barnes, the new jockey, first attracted attention in August this year, when he rode Proctor Knott to victory at Monmouth Park. On Sept. 4 he rode the winning horse for the Futurity Stakes at Sheepshead Bay. He is fourteen years of age, 4ft 9in in height, and can ride at 90lb without wasting. He never weighs over 110lb, and his frame is so small that he will probably never get above that weight; so one may predict for him a long career, for he rides cautiously, and well. He is a handsome lad; has black, sparkling eyes; his hands are very small, but with the strength of steel. He controls the most vicious horses with ease; he is a good judge of pace, and at the finish handles his horse as well as M'Laughlin or Garrison, who until now have been the champions of the field.

Theatricals are again beginning to be an interesting feature of our city life. The season has opened at Daly's, Wallack's, and other houses. Mr. Daly and his company express themselves greatly pleased with the courtesy and kindness they received in London. A New York gentleman tells me that he has authority to say that Mr. Irving and Miss Terry will pay another visit to America in 1890, bringing with them "Macbeth" and other attractions. Mr. Moss, the well-known theatrical manager, has presented Mr. E. H. Sothern with a fine full-length portrait of his father in the character of Dundreary, painted thirty years ago. The donor has added the characteristic gift of a thick gold chain by which to hang it in the young actor's chambers. Mr. Sothern, as Lord Chumley, in the new play of that name, is crowding the Lyceum Theatre. Every seat is sold at the Casino for the first performance of "The Yeomen of the Guard" on Monday.

GLASGOW CONSERVATIVES.

The following letters have been received by the Glasgow Conservative Association, from Lord Salisbury and Mr. Smith, in reply to resolutions passed at Mr. Balfour's recent meeting in Glasgow:

"Hatfield House, Hatfield, Oct. 10, 1888.

"Sir—I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 6th inst., enclosing a resolution from a great Conservative meeting in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow. I have received with great satisfaction the assurance you convey of the approval which the policy of the Government in Ireland has received in Glasgow. I have no doubt that the enthusiastic welcome which was tendered to Mr. Balfour, at Glasgow, will strengthen his hand in the arduous conflict he is maintaining on behalf of the rights and liberties of the loyal population of Ireland.—Yours faithfully, "SALISBURY.

"W. W. Grieve, Esq."

"10, Downing-street, Whitehall, Oct. 10, 1888.

"Dear Sir—Mr. W. H. Smith desires me to acknowledge with many thanks the receipt of your letter of the 6th inst. enclosing a copy of the cordial resolution of confidence in her Majesty's Ministers, which was passed at the recent great Unionist meeting in Glasgow. Mr. Smith need not say with what pleasure he read of the reception accorded to Mr. Balfour. The approval expressed by Glasgow in the Irish policy of the Government cannot fail to strengthen the hands of all who are engaged in the service of law and order in Ireland, and is the best answer to the misrepresentation with which the Government is assailed by its opponents.—Yours faithfully,

"W. W. Grieve, Esq." "J. L. PATTISON.

Yesterday morning the story rapidly spread in Spitalfields that a man had been found with his abdomen ripped open, and that the man was another victim of the unknown Whitechapel murderer. Upon inquiry, however, it was found that the sufferer, who was by trade a butcher, was cutting a quarter of beef into joints when his knife slipped, inflicting a very serious wound in the abdomen. He was conveyed in great pain to the London Hospital, where he died shortly afterwards.

POLICE PENSIONERS.—Mr. Howard Vincent, M.P., occupied the chair yesterday at the quarterly meeting of the Metropolitan and City Police Pensioners' Employment Association. He spoke of the great trials to which the police were exposed in the course of their duty, and said they were frequently most unjustly blamed in a moment of popular excitement for occurrences beyond human control. With that important branch of the service with which he was formerly associated—the Criminal Investigation Department, which was the most abused and misrepresented of all—he had especial sympathy at the present time.

NEW RUPTURE APPLIANCE.—Sufferers may save themselves a lifetime of discomfort and suffering by being properly fitted with a perfect appliance. Examination free by a most experienced and skilful surgeon at Harness' Electropathic Establishment, 52, Oxford-street, London, W. (corner of Rathbone-place). Note only address, and call to-day if possible. Pamphlet free.—[ADVERTISEMENT.]

NEWS FROM VIENNA.

[TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

VIENNA, Oct. 12.

The Prince of Wales returned to Vienna this evening without having had a shot at the Imperial and Royal bears of Georgeny. On taking leave of his Royal Highness, the Crown Prince expressed his regret at the result of the expedition, but the Prince of Wales assured him that he had greatly enjoyed his trip, and seen much that had interested him.

To-night the King of Saxony left for Dresden. King Milan arrived here this afternoon, and will have an interview with the Emperor of Austria to-morrow. Belgrade rumour couples King Milan's presence in Vienna with certain matters relating to the divorce suit, which is said to meet with serious difficulties. According to an interesting letter which I received to-day from a well-informed friend in Roumania, Russian agents are hard at work in the rural districts, and it is to be apprehended that in the course of this winter there will be a fresh rising of the peasantry with far more serious consequences than the last.

I hear from Rome that the accounts which have reached the Italian Admiralty concerning the construction of forts in the Dardanelles are eminently disquieting, proving, as they do, that the whole plan is instigated by Russia. Italy is, of course, concerned in the matter, but to a far less extent than England.

The new Burg Theatre is to be opened on Sunday, and the good people of the Kaiserstadt are magnifying what is an incident of local interest into an event of national importance. The new building is undoubtedly a fine one, both inside and out, and contains a vast number of artistic treasures and scientific marvels. But though the actors and actresses are the best in Central Europe, it can hardly be regarded as a great school of drama like the Comédie Française of Paris. Nor can it be said it has produced actors or actresses who have roused enthusiasm amongst audiences of all nations such as Madame Ristori, Sarah Bernhardt, Salvini, Rossi, Coquelin, and many others. Nevertheless, the Viennese are justly proud of their new house. A general rehearsal was held yesterday evening, the whole edifice being brilliantly illuminated by electricity. The grand vestibule, the marble staircases, and the great foyer were one sea of light and dazzling colour. For the first time the rich tapestry, paintings, and statuary were seen to advantage, the effect produced by the incandescent installation being magnificent. The auditorium was radiant with electric lamps, the boxes and galleries being illuminated. The grand chandelier was ablaze with countless electric burners. This is unquestionably one of the most beautiful of the many works of art the theatre contains. It measures four metres in diameter, and was manufactured by a large Vienna metal founder. It has four hundred and eighty jets, the whole consisting of sixteen delicately designed festoons, a complication of galvanic gilt bronze figures adorning the elaborate wrought-iron work of which the chandelier is chiefly made. It was probably not without a tinge of nervousness that the actors and actresses appeared on the new stage. The former Burg Theatre, built on the old-fashioned model, was in most respects entirely different. Instead of being brilliantly lighted up, the stage was at rehearsals comparatively dark. The primitive surroundings behind the scenes and in the green-rooms added to the discomfort of the performers. In the new house they have each their private room opening upon a corridor in direct communication with the stage. At eight o'clock the Emperor, accompanied by the King of Saxony and the Grand Duke of Tuscany, appeared in the Court box. Count Kalnoky, Count Taaffe, and many other persons of distinction were present in the house, and an introductory piece having been played by the orchestra, the rehearsal began. It lasted an hour and a quarter, the performance consisting of "Wallenstein's Lager," represented to perfection in all its details. The stage, which at first looks somewhat small, seems gradually to expand as the eye accustoms itself to the scene. This is to be ascribed to the incandescent light, which, by rendering distant objects perfectly distinct, seems to bring the actors nearer to the audience. The light is too soft to be injurious to the sight, but is, nevertheless, very powerful, revealing every nook and corner.

MR. GLADSTONE'S VISIT TO WOLVERHAMPTON.

Mr. Gladstone has written as follows to Mr. Schnadhorst respecting the proposal that the right hon. gentleman should visit Wolverhampton on his way to Birmingham and drive through the Black Country:

"Hawarden, Oct. 11.

"Dear Mr. Schnadhorst—Having heard that it has been contemplated by kind friends in Wolverhampton that I should make a public journey from that town to Birmingham or from the house of Mr. Stanhope, I write to say that it would, in my judgment, be a great mistake to do anything of this kind on Saturday, Nov. 3, on account of the arrangements already made by others, and that on Monday, the 5th, physical considerations would render it impossible for me to attempt anything of the kind before the meeting in the afternoon. The truth is that the expedition to Birmingham and things to be done there are as much as at my time of life I can undertake (and I don't think they have ever been undertaken by any one before), and I don't intend to make any addition to them, although had I time I would readily go wherever our friends may desire.—Faithfully yours, "W. E. GLADSTONE."

With the view of inducing candidates to do better practical work at the City and Guilds of London examinations, the Carpenters' Company have purchased four models of carpentry, and have also opened a "Free technical lending library" for the benefit of competitors in the above examinations, and for the more advanced examination of the Carpenters' Company.

The West of Scotland Technical College authorities and the District Council, acting in conjunction with the Plumbers' Company, have started technical classes for plumbers. The introductory lecture was delivered on Thursday night in the hall of the Christian Institute, Glasgow. There was a very large attendance, upwards of 800 plumbers—masters, operatives, and apprentices—from all parts of the district being present. Mr. Thomas Russell, one of the governors of the institute, presided.

The Cardiff magistrates yesterday heard a further batch of summonses against proprietors or managers of clubs alleged to be of a bogus character. Henry Bridge, of Roath, whose house the inspector of police searched under a warrant, and where a number of men were found drinking, was fined £50 and costs.

BAILIFFS MOBBED BY WOMEN.—The Tweed bailiffs were yesterday engaged in stopping fishermen's wives in the streets of Berwick, and searching them for salmon. One woman placed a piece of coal in a bag, and walked to where two bailiffs were standing. They stopped her, and were about to search her, when at a given signal a number of the woman's companions appeared, and mobbed the bailiffs, who had to take refuge in a shop, and eventually to be escorted home by the police.

GUN ACCIDENT.—At Lin Bradfield, near Sheffield, last evening, a boy named Herbert Bram, aged thirteen, the son of a publican, was accidentally shot by his brother. The two were out together, and Herbert's brother sat down on a bank to rest with a gun between his knees, when the trigger was accidentally pulled, and the charge of small shot lodged in one of Herbert's legs. The injured lad was removed to Sheffield Infirmary, where he lies in a serious condition.

PRICES FOR FUTURE DELIVERY.

NEW YORK, Oct. 12.—Wheat at the opening was firm at 1c to 1½c rise, and fluctuated violently owing to the fear of manipulation. May sold early in the day at 119½, but the advance was lost owing to free selling to realise on the part of local longs. Speculation was the main force in the market. Values have given way ½c to 1c, and in the absence of shipping inquiry the final tone is weak with a downward tendency.

SHAM FIGHT AT DOVER.

A very interesting sham fight took place on the ground to the north of Dover Castle yesterday, in the presence of his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge, who visited the town for the purpose of making his annual inspection. The ground upon which the manœuvres took place included the greater part of the area of the land on which the Easter Monday evolutions were held two or three years ago.

The attacking force consisted of the Royal Munster Fusiliers, under the command of Colonel Woodward, and the East Kent Regiment (Colonel Kerr). The defenders comprised the Royal Irish Fusiliers (Lieutenant-Colonel Cox), who had with him as infantry the garrison artillery, Nos. 4 and 5 Batteries London Division, the 8th Battery Lancashire Division, 10th Battery Scottish Division, and the Depôt Cinque Ports Division. Each man was supplied with ten rounds of ammunition, with a reserve of ten more, and 600, as a further reserve, was carried by mules. The defenders had the advantage of a particularly strong position, with plenty of cover for the riflemen, while their opponents, who were supposed to have effected a landing to the eastward, had to advance across an open plateau commanded by Fort Burgoyne. Guston Farm was the defenders' base. The new order was enforced relating to the direction of movements of troops being as far as practicable carried out by whistle. The attackers were ultimately repulsed.

After a short delay the men were formed up for the march past, which took place in the presence of a large number of spectators. The weather was delightfully fine during the whole of the proceedings. Last night the Duke and his staff were entertained by Major-General Montgomery Moore at Dover Castle. To-day his Royal Highness will proceed to Shorncliffe.

Alice Merrick, the wife of a clerk living in Hulme, Manchester, has just been delivered of triplets. All the children are living. The Queen's bounty usual in such cases has been applied for and remitted to the mother.

Dr. George Moore, in his work on "Nose and Throat Diseases," says: "The Glycerine Jujubes prepared by James Epps and Co. are of undoubted service as a curative or palliative agent," and Dr. Gordon Holmes, Senior Physician to the Municipal Throat and Ear Infirmary, writes: "After an extended trial, I have found your Glycerine Jujubes of considerable benefit in almost all forms of throat disease."—[ADVT.]

THE EAST-END MURDERS.

The following letter has been received by Mr. Metcalfe, the vestry clerk of Whitechapel, from the Home Office, in reply to a resolution of the vestry asking Mr. Matthews to give every possible facility for the speedy arrest of the murderer:

"Whitehall, Oct. 10, 1888.

"Sir—I am directed by the Secretary of State to acknowledge your letter of the 4th inst., forwarding a copy of a resolution passed at a vestry meeting of the parish of St. Mary, Whitechapel, expressing sorrow at the recent murders in the East-end of London, and urging her Majesty's Government to use their utmost endeavours to discover the criminal. I am instructed to state that Mr. Matthews shares the feeling of the vestry with regard to these murders, and that he has given directions, and that the police have instructions, to exercise any and every power they possess, and even to use an amount of discretion with regard to suspected persons, in their efforts to discover the criminal. And I am further to state that the Secretary of State, after personal conference with the Commissioners of Police, at which the whole of the difficulties have been fully discussed, is satisfied that no means have been, or will be spared in tracing the offender, and bringing him to justice.—I am, Sir, yours obediently, "E. LEIGH PEMBERTON.

"T. Metcalfe, Esq., Vestry Clerk, Whitechapel."

It will be remembered that when the Home Secretary expressed his opinion that the rule of the Home Office in reference to rewards in cases of murder should not be departed from, a petition was forwarded to her Majesty praying that a reward should be offered for the conviction of the assassin or assassins. To this petition an answer was sent by Mr. Matthews, which was practically a repetition of his former decision. It was, however, thought that as the Corporation of the City of London and various other bodies had offered rewards amounting in the aggregate to over £1,000 the Home Secretary was possibly content to let those rewards stand in lieu of the Government offer. Further correspondence ensued, Mr. Lusk, on behalf of the inhabitants of Whitechapel, pointing out that the present series of murders is absolutely unique in the annals of crime, that the astuteness and determination of the murderer had hitherto been, and may possibly continue to be, more than a match for Scotland-yard and the Old Jewry combined, and that all the ordinary means of detection had failed. He therefore calls attention to the fact that the only means left untried for the detection of the murderer has been the offer of a Government reward. Rewards have been offered from other quarters, including the Corporation of the City of London, "but neither the vigilance committees, the Corporation, nor private individuals can offer a pardon to an accomplice, and therefore the value of such offers is considerably less than the proclamation of a reward by her Majesty's Government, with a pardon for such accomplice." To this an official reply has been received, stating that the matter "shall receive due attention."

At the Belfast Police-court, yesterday, John Foster was brought up on suspicion of being concerned in the Whitechapel murder.—Constable Carland deposed: From information I received I proceeded to No. 11, Memel-street. The prisoner was not there when I went first, but I went back about half an hour afterwards and then found him in. I went upstairs to the room he occupied, and rapped at the door. The prisoner said, "Come in." I went in, and found him in bed. I asked his name, where he had come from, and how long he had been in Belfast. He gave the name of William John Foster, and said he had no fixed address. He arrived in town on Sunday from Greenock, where he had spent two days, but he could not say where he stopped. Previous to that he was in Glasgow for four days, and before that in Edinburgh. He did not know how long he was there, nor did he know anyone living there. I found a clasp-knife in his coat pocket, a purse containing £19 4s 5½d, and the chisel and handle produced were lying on the table in the bed-room. These, when separated, fit into a bag I found. In the bag were three razors, a table-knife, a small knife, and a number of watchmaking appliances. He said that he was a watchmaker, but that he did nothing at the trade, as he had an income of his own, which he got from his father, who lived in London. Replying to further questions, he said his father was a brewer, but could not give the address. I found the silver watch, and chain, and locket (produced) in his pockets. He said the watch was his own. It bears the monogram "A. M. R." There was a piece of broken necklet in his coat pocket. The watch is a lever without the maker's name. I examined the clothes of the prisoner, and found he was wearing boots similar to those worn by military men.—The prisoner was remanded for a week.

THE CANONBURY TRAGEDY.

At the Clerkenwell Police-court yesterday, Henry Glennie, 24, a hot-water fitter, giving no address, was charged, on remand, before Mr. Horace Smith, on suspicion, with having been concerned, with other persons not in custody, in wilfully murdering Frances Maria Wright, aged 71, at the house, No. 19, Canonbury-terrace, on May 16 last.

Mr. Mead appeared on behalf of the Treasury; and Mr. Metcalfe for the prisoner.

George Wilson, a milkman, deposed to seeing, on the day of Mrs. Wright's death, a man running in Canonbury-terrace, pursued by a lady. She called to witness, but as she spoke in French he did not understand, and did nothing. He would not like to say positively that Glennie was that man. It was three or four months since.

Henry Brand deposed that he had been in the employ of the Eagle Range Foundry Company from about November 1886 to June 1888, with a short interval. Prisoner was in the same service when witness went there, and left about February last. Glennie worked with him as labourer on one or two jobs, and had at times used the bag produced for his tools. On the morning of the day on which he was arrested the accused called on him at his house and asked him to buy some tools for £1. Witness promised to call and see him, but did not keep the appointment.

Cross-examined: He should think there was nothing very unusual for a man to sell his tools or his bag on leaving such employment as the prisoner's.

Mary Dominey, of 24, Wynford-road, Barnsbury, said that she had frequently gone to Mrs. Wright's to do charing. She ceased to work for her about four or five weeks before her death. At that time Mrs. Wright was very ill and attended by a doctor. A fortnight or three weeks later witness went to see her, with a girl named Amy White. She might have told White that deceased was often alone. Witness knew prisoner, who used to come and see her at 7, Payne-street. She had seen Amy White and the accused often together. Amy White was living at 7, Payne-street. She had not seen Glennie for a fortnight before Mrs. Wright's death. She saw him about a week after that event near the Angel, at Islington. She did not have any conversation with him then. About a month afterwards she saw Glennie at King's-cross, and he said he had been in the country. One evening some time afterwards she saw Glennie with Amy White. She was angry, and said she would have them both locked up for going to Mrs. Wright's house. They made no answer but went away. She saw prisoner the Monday before he was apprehended, and told him that Police-sergeant M'Kenzie had been to her mother's house, and wanted to see her about the murder, and added, "I don't know anything about it." Prisoner said, "They can't touch you. I went to the house along with another party and I struck Mrs. Wright. I felt her a few minutes afterwards and she was cold. I am very sorry for what I have done. The other man was so struck at finding Mrs. Wright cold that we both ran out of the house, and the other man went off and left me. I was followed by a French woman." Prisoner also told her that he went to the house to see if he could get anything. He struck Mrs. Wright so that he could go over the house, but had no intention of doing what he had done. He told witness not to tell any one, and she said she would not. She asked who the other man was, but he made no answer.

Cross-examined: She was angry, and had had a row with the prisoner when she used the words at King's-cross. She was in fear that she would be charged when she was detained at the police-station. She gave the information to the police the morning after she had been detained.

Prisoner was further remanded on the understanding that the case for the prosecution would conclude at the next hearing.

SPECULATIVE INVESTMENTS.

ARGENTINE HARD DOLLARS.—My latest issued advice for speculative investment was Argentine Hard Dollars. These I recommended when they stood at 69. A purchaser would have since received a quarter's dividend of £9 5s. 3d. on 5,000 dollars, the equivalent of £1,000 stock. They have since been 73¼, so that, allowing for the accrued increase in value, a purchaser would have received interest at the rate of over 25 per cent. per annum on the amount invested, and had they been purchased with a cover of 2 per cent., the profit secured would have been at the rate of 262 per cent. on amount invested.

I again repeat I have been invariably right in my speculative investments. I only recommend good dividend paying stocks, and I think this system of making money well worth your attention. See below.

£5	Commands	£500 Stock.
£10	„	1,000 „
£20	„	2,000 „
£50	„	5,000 „

No other liability whatever.

THE AMOUNT of STOCK I dealt in this YEAR up to the Account ending Sept. 28 was over SEVENTY-ONE MILLIONS.

£71,000,000.

IMPORTANT TELEGRAPHIC ARRANGEMENTS.

I WISH to call close attention to a new departure in my business, which is of the utmost importance to country dealers. I have made arrangements with the Post Office for a direct wire into my own offices, thus saving some ten to twenty minutes on messages. I need hardly point out the advantages to customers dealing at a distance, who are thus put in actual contact with my offices from every part of the United Kingdom. Thus a message sent from

MY CITY OFFICES to MANCHESTER is DELIVERED in FIVE MINUTES.

JOHN SHAW'S SYSTEM of BUSINESS.—He offers more liberal terms for dealing than any dealer in London or elsewhere. Get advice where you choose, but deal where you get the best terms, and possible losses will result in positive profits.
Deals at Close Prices.
Opens Speculative Accounts with One per Cent. Cover.

JOHN SHAW'S other Offices, as they are all in direct communication. Customers wishing quiet consultations on Investment, &c., should call at Wardrobe Chambers, where there are always private rooms set apart for this purpose, and competent men to advise.

JOHN SHAW'S OFFICES, both in the City and West-end, unquestionably offer more facilities for transacting Stock Exchange business than any other office in London, and his name is sufficient guarantee for liberal treatment.

For the use and information of his clients, JOHN SHAW has prepared the following:
Highest and lowest prices for the past five years of all the leading Stocks and Shares, together with the dividends paid during the same period.
Railway weekly Traffic Returns Book for the current half-year, with corresponding figures for 1886 and 1887.

[illegible] £30,000, payable £15,000 in fully-paid shares and £15,000 in cash. But should the directors think it desirable, the vendor is further willing to receive any part or all of the remainder of the purchase money in shares of the company. The furniture, fittings, fixtures, stock, stores, and effects on the premises will be taken by the company at a valuation.

The Farnborough Hydro-Therapeutic Establishment combines the advantages of a sanatorium with those of a first-class hotel, located in one of the healthiest pine districts of the kingdom, and within easy distance of the metropolis.

The success of the establishment is not entirely dependent upon invalids, for experience proves that in nearly every case patients are accompanied by persons not needing treatment, and the proximity of Aldershot Camp may always be relied upon for attracting a certain contingent of visitors independently of invalids. The baths are also open to non-residents, and will, it is expected, furnish an important source of revenue. The returns from the stabling are very considerable. From these various resources good dividends may reasonably be anticipated, experience having proved that undertakings of this character are very profitable.

The vendor has undertaken to defray all preliminary expenses incidental to the establishment of the company up to the first allotment of shares.

The following contracts have been entered into, namely:

1. A contract, dated August 2, 1888, and made between John Netherside, of the one part, and the company of the other part.

2. A contract dated August 2nd, 1888, and made between G. and G. Stern, of the one part, and John Netherside, of the other part, both of which may be inspected at the offices of the company's solicitors.

Other business contracts, in addition to the two hereinbefore referred to, have been entered into. Applicants for shares and debentures shall be deemed to have waived the publication, in accordance with section 38 of the Companies Act, 1867, of any further particulars of such contracts.

The freehold has been valued on behalf of the company, and intending subscribers can inspect the valuation at the office of the company.

It is proposed to make application in due course to the London Stock Exchange for a quotation of the company's shares.

Where no allotment is made the deposit will be returned in full. If the whole amount applied for be not allotted, the surplus paid on deposit will be applied towards the sum due on allotment.

Prospectuses and forms of application may be obtained of the bankers, broker, solicitors, or auditor, and at the offices of the company.

London, October, 1888.

"FOR THE BLOOD IS THE LIFE."

CLARKE'S WORLD-FAMED BLOOD MIXTURE.

CLARKE'S WORLD-FAMED BLOOD MIXTURE.

CLARKE'S WORLD-FAMED BLOOD MIXTURE.

"I feel duty bound to inform you of the wonderful effects of Clarke's Blood Mixture on me. I have had suffering over two years of a severe nature. I first consulted the best medical aid I could possibly procure for over six months, till my means were run out, and with a sad heart I was compelled to come into the workhouse hospital, where I now am. I had been here 18 months, and my legs gradually got worse. I began to think they would never get better, till about five months ago I read in a copy of the Hull, East Yorkshire, and Lincolnshire Times of 'Clarke's Blood Mixture,' and I determined that when I could raise the means I would try it; so I commenced to deprive myself of little necessaries till at length I had raised eleven shillings. I got my sister to purchase me a large bottle. She brought me one in on May 6, and to my surprise she brought me 1s. 9d. back, which enabled me to purchase two small pots of your Miraculous Salve. I commenced to use the Blood Mixture on May 7. I then had five wounds on the left leg, one very large on the ankle-bone, one on the shin about the size of half-a-crown, and three on the calf almost as large. The right leg was somewhat similar, but there were three sores which I thought would break into one, but all are perfectly healed up now but one small place on the left ankle about the size of a shilling. There are 15 patients in the ward that I am in, and they were surprised to see my legs when I had taken the mixture a week, and there are three of them now using it. I am very sorry, indeed, that I cannot purchase another bottle. You may judge for yourself how I am fixed, after being in here 18 months. My sister, Mrs. Bulmer, lives at No. 25, Grimsby-lane, Market-place, Hull, and if you would kindly send me a small quantity of your Mixture to the above address I should be able to get it, and I shall never forget you as long as I live.—Yours faithfully, "EDWARD STATHERS." "No. 4 Ward, Anlaby-road Workhouse Hospital, Hull, June 12, 1888."

LATER.

"I write to let you know how I am getting on. I received the bottle of Mixture you sent me, and the wounds are now completely healed up. I will be out of here in a few days, and get to work, which is already promised me. I am going to reside at my sister's, Mrs. Bulmer. If you wish to use this case for the benefit of other poor sufferers, do so. The results of your Mixture is really wonderful.—I remain, your thankful servant, "EDWARD STATHERS." June 28, 1888."

THOUSANDS of TESTIMONIALS.

Messrs. A. John and Co., Druggists, &c., Agra, India, write under date June 5, 1888, as follows: "Dr. Mookund Lall, Hon. Surgeon to his Excellency the Viceroy of India, prescribes Clarke's Blood Mixture largely, and speaks highly of its efficacy in skin affections, &c. On this account we wrote our London agents, asking if you could supply the Mixture for dispensing purposes."

LONDON, SATURDAY, OCTOBER 13.

Our special correspondent at Rome writes that the leading politicians in Italy of all parties regard the Emperor William's visit as setting the seal to the understanding between Italy and the central European Powers, and giving an assurance of the general peace for years to come.

Yesterday the Kaiser paid a visit to the Pope, and during his stay at the Vatican his Majesty had a private interview with his Holiness lasting upwards of twenty minutes, no other person being present.

According to a German newspaper the cipher code by which the Emperor Frederick communicated with the Ministers of State is missing, and is believed to have been stolen.

His Royal Highness the Commander-in-Chief witnessed an interesting sham fight on the ground to the north of Dover yesterday.

Lord Salisbury and Mr. W. H. Smith have forwarded to the Glasgow Conservative Association their cordial acknowledgment of a resolution recently passed at a public meeting in that city approving of the Irish policy of the Government, and thanking them for their cordial reception of Mr. Balfour.

Sir John Simon, who has represented Dewsbury since it was constituted a borough, has informed his constituents that owing to continued ill-health he is compelled to resign his seat, and that on the reassembling of Parliament he intends to take steps to that end.

The Central News supplies what profess to be extracts from Sir Morell Mackenzie's book on the Emperor Frederick, which is to be regularly published on Monday.

Two more letters have been received from the Home Office respecting the East-end crimes. In one, which was an answer to a renewed request that the Government should offer a reward, Mr. Matthews promised to give the communication "due consideration." The other is an acknowledgment of a resolution passed by the Whitechapel Vestry, and in it the Home Secretary states that, after personal conference with the Commissioners of Police, he is satisfied that no means have been or will be spared in tracing the offender and bringing him to justice.

A man giving the name of John Foster was brought up at the Belfast Police-court yesterday on suspicion of being concerned in the Whitechapel murders. The constable who made the arrest deposed that he found in the prisoner's possession three razors and as many knives, besides nearly £20 in money. The accused was remanded.

Among the deputations received by the Metropolitan Board of Works yesterday was one from Whitechapel, headed by the Bishop of Bedford, urging that the sites of Bell-lane and Pearl-street in that district should be scheduled with a view to their being improved under the Artisans' Dwellings Acts. It was pointed out that the population in this locality is so dense as to be injurious to the moral and physical well-being of the inhabitants. The subject was referred to a committee.

Mary Hawkes and James Fordham, both of whom have been frequently convicted, were again brought before Mr. Montagu Williams, at Worship-street, yesterday, on a charge of assaulting and robbing a Scandinavian in a common lodging-house in Spitalfields. They were committed for trial.

Henry Glennie was again examined at the Clerkenwell Police-court, yesterday, on the charge of being concerned in the wilful murder of Mrs. Wright, at Canonbury-terrace, in May last. A young woman named Mary Dominey stated that shortly before his arrest the accused told her he had gone to the house of the deceased with another man, that he struck her, and that a few minutes afterwards he felt she was cold. A further remand was granted.

Yesterday the stock markets were, with certain exceptions, weak, although the settlement was concluded without difficulty. Canadian and Mexican (Vera Cruz) Railways showed chief depression, and English lines gave way. American, however, were comparatively steady. Among Foreign Government bonds Peruvian were in request at an important rise, while Spanish were heavy. Consols receded 1-16 per cent.

IT would not be easy, perhaps, to assign the governing motive which determined the Middlesex magistrates to renew the music licence of the Alexandra Palace without imposing the condition of a discontinuance of "Professor" BALDWIN's descents in his parachute. Their decision appears to have been due to various influences, among which the plausibility of the aeronaut himself was probably not the least effective. Our own opinion of the question as to permitting or prohibiting this and similar performances is already known, and it is not our present purpose to urge anything further in support of it. We have merely referred to this ruling of the Middlesex Bench as one among the last "functionings," as a physiologist would call it, of a jurisdiction which is about to disappear, and which, whatever may be said of it in other parts of the country, has worked in the Metropolis in the most unsatisfactory manner possible. People may and will differ to the end of time as to the exercise of the licensing power in this and many other cases; but what distinguishes the action of such a departing tribunal from that of a properly constituted one is that it always leaves the controversy exactly where it was before. Not a single intelligent opinion on such questions ever has been or ever could be in the slightest degree affected by the fact that it was confirmed by or opposed to that of a so-called judicial body, which can show no single element of superiority to the mass of their fellow-citizens, who have neither the independent authority which belongs to officers of the central Government, nor the representative weight attaching to one popularly elected. It is needless, however, to pursue this part of the subject further. The Middlesex magistrates are already as good as numbered—so far as this jurisdiction is concerned—with the judicially dead. When the Government found themselves compelled last summer to lighten the Local Government Act by throwing over the licensing clause of the Bill, there was fortunately one little provision about Licensing that escaped. By Sub-section 5 of Clause 3 it is enacted that, on and after the momentous date described throughout the Act as "the appointed day," there shall be transferred to the Council of each county all business done by the Quarter Sessions, or any committee appointed by the Quarter Sessions, in respect of, among many other things, "the licensing, under any general Act, of houses and other places for music or for dancing." Accordingly, on the 1st of April, the control of the Middlesex Bench over such questions as that which they have just decided will cease and determine; and to it will succeed the jurisdiction of a popularly-elected body, who may not be infallible in the exercise of their discretion, but whose judgment will at any rate be primâ facie entitled to the respect of their fellow-citizens. We need not say with what relief this change will be welcomed by all persons whose business interests are likely to be affected by the reasonable or unreasonable mode in which the licensing jurisdiction is exercised but the change is one of much wider concern to the community at large. It has a direct bearing upon a question which is daily tending to reassume the importance which it possessed in the ancient world, but which has never yet been duly recognised in the modern State—the question, we mean, of public amusements considered as a necessary element in a happy, healthy, and well ordered national life.

There is something at once pathetic and irritating in the helplessness of the vast congregation of human beings inhabiting the Metropolis with respect to this most important element in their lives. No people in the world, in spite of obsolete sarcasms to the contrary, are more willing and anxious to amuse themselves than the English. Like other hardworking races, as like most energetic individuals, they throw themselves with equal zest and thoroughness into the business of recreation whenever it comes in their way. But how few of them find it often in their way! How miserably off are huge sections of the metropolitan population in respect of public amusements! Even in summer they are none too fortunately situated, though to many of the poorer masses of the people the sight of grass and flowers, and the taste of fresh air, are recreation in themselves, and the opportunities for the enjoyment of these simple pleasures in the Metropolitan and suburban parks and gardens, and open spaces generally, have, no doubt, been immensely multiplied of late years. The winter, however, is coming on; and the winter will drive hundreds of thousands of Londoners, if they wish for any relief from the monotony of their daily occupations, to seek it at the public-house. The theatre is necessarily the amusement of the minority—a large and an increasing one, no doubt, but still a minority. Even the cheaper music-halls can only meet the wants of the merest fraction of the people; and for aught else, for anything of a wider reach—for the winter-garden, for instance, in a position and on a scale which would provide harmless and enlivening entertainment really, and not as a mere figure of speech, "for the million"—we may look in vain. On the one day of the week when the largest number of persons would avail themselves of it—if it existed—on the only day on which some of them could do so, our search would certainly be fruitless. Amusement, which is supplied in a thin and scanty stream, so to speak, to the great mass of the London population on weekdays, may on Sunday be said to run absolutely dry. It is here that the stationary and helpless condition of the metropolitan community is most painfully conspicuous, and its main causes are perfectly well known. They are two in number: The first is the mischievously capricious system by which our public amusements have hitherto been regulated; the other the lingering survival of that spirit of Puritanism which practically transformed the character of the English people two hundred years ago, and the influence of which, though it is plainly dying out among us, dies extraordinarily hard. The first of these causes is now on the eve of disappearance; of the second we cannot unfortunately say as much. It still retains vitality enough to fight for its existence; and will probably take some killing yet. Nevertheless it is difficult to determine its extent and potency until its companion cause has been removed. Not until we see a sensible, equitable, and consistent system of censorship of public amusements set fairly to work shall we be able to decide how far the natural and human instinct of enjoyment will be able to combat and overthrow what remains of the ascetic influence of the Roundhead.

That a powerful stimulus will prove to have been given to private enterprise in these matters by recent legislation we can hardly doubt. Nothing, we believe, but the state of uncertainty which has so long existed as to the proceedings of licensing authorities could have so long kept supply and demand at arm's-length in this business of providing amusements for the public. The English people, we repeat, are as anxious to amuse themselves as any other nation in the world; and certainly even their enemies have never denied that they understand making money as well as their neighbours. With a keen and widespread want crying out to be met, and large profits to be made by meeting it satisfactorily, and with a due regard to commercial prudence, it is clear that some very formidable artificial obstacles must have existed to have kept the would-be consumer and the potential producer apart. No one even moderately acquainted with our licensing system, with its strange jumble of jurisdictions—jurisdiction over dancing, over music, over the sale of drink—can doubt that it has steadily operated for the discouragement, not to say the paralysis, of private activities which would otherwise have been directed to ends most useful to the community. The operation of the system has made it always hazardous, and sometimes absolutely impossible, for any prudent projector to embark his capital freely in undertakings the prosecution of which might at any moment be arrested by the hand of an authority whose action was well-nigh incalculable, and against whose decisions there was practically no appeal. It was not as though it were possible for such a person by taking much thought to discover what he must do or omit to do in order to ensure the retention of privileges originally conceded to him. The worst mischief of the system consisted in the fact that the motives acting on its administrators were often utterly inscrutable, and their decisions indistinguishable from the purest caprice. Had it been in the power of any intending caterers for the amusement of the public to acquire a reasonable certainty of being allowed to carry on their business without interference from magisterial authority, there can be no sort of doubt that the number of such persons and the amount of their ventures would, ere this, have very largely increased. Now that we have done away, or are on the point of doing away with these unsatisfactory tribunals, and are substituting an authority in whose general good sense and consistency, at any rate, it is possible to place confidence, we shall for the first time see what private enterprise, set free from restraining agents, can do for the amusement of the people. The time is not yet ripe—if it is ever destined to ripen—for the elevation of this function to its true place in the economy of the State, with a Minister of Public Amusements presiding over it, like the Roman ædiles of old; and one day perhaps, if that be not too Utopian a dream, a Budget of his own. Meanwhile, it is to private enterprise that we must look to assist us in this, as it has assisted us in so many other matters, and we have every reason to believe that if it only obtains fair play it will respond to the appeal.

A CAREER at once remarkable and yet uneventful has just been closed by a death which is untimely without being exactly premature. It was a life both pathetically short and mysteriously long; an experience which could be matched by that of our tenderest infancy, while exceeding that of our most venerated age; a biography which would not half fill a week's paging of a diary, and yet stretches back to a period far before the first use of written symbols, if not before the first stammerings of human speech. Such were the contradictions embodied in that lately living paradox which a correspondent has informed us, we have just lost, but which, paradoxical to the last, has nevertheless been preserved. It was a paradox in which an Elizabethan lyrist would have delighted, and which he would have wreathed with a thousand fantastic and exquisite conceits: but what its departure amounts to in plain prose of the nineteenth century is that the Greenock toad has died. There can be no doubt of the melancholy fact; for it has been communicated by the lady, Miss AMELIA B. EDWARDS, who first introduced the reptile to the notice of the public, and who can say of it, as GRATTAN said of the Irish Parliament, that she sat by its cradle and has followed its hearse. The sepulchre of the departed one, unlike that of ALEXANDER, can be pointed out. The Greenock toad is "quietly inurned" in a jar of spirits in the museum of its birthplace. After life's fitful fever—dormant for a good many years, but acute towards the end—he presumably sleeps well. Truly, if tritely, may it be said that we are here to-day and gone to-morrow. It seems but yesterday, and was in fact but a few days earlier, that the now deceased batrachian emerged from a seclusion of twenty thousand years and made its bow to the modern world. Three days—a mere trifle of seventy-two hours—formed the miserable span of his above-ground life; and it is melancholy to think that, but for the well-meant attentions of a much younger family of living creatures, that short life might, for all we know, have been indefinitely prolonged. The toad owes its death, so far as we can gather, to the rashly experimentalising spirit of modern science. "A local surgeon," writes Miss EDWARDS, "hoping to enable him to take food, slit the membrane by which his mouth was closed, and the patient, unfortunately, had not sufficient vitality to survive the operation." But why, we cannot help asking, did that local surgeon assume that he knew the toad's business better than the toad himself? Could anything more amusingly illustrate the intellectual self-sufficiency of our race? Here was an animal who, for a period of twenty thousand years, had given proof that he, at least understood the art of living even under the most unfavourable conditions. Released from the prison in which he had displayed his mastery of this perhaps unduly neglected art, he is brought into contact with man; and man must needs immediately set to work to show him "how to do it." This is "teaching your grandmother" with a vengeance. A little respect for so ripe an experience in the business of living as our prehistoric friend was able to boast would have been more in keeping with that grace which we oftener hear of than see—the "modesty of true science."

At the same time, and while maintaining our censure of the rashness which suggested this surgical operation—we do not feel at all sure that it was the actual cause of death. It may be more agreeable to us to save the self-esteem of the race at the expense of one individual member of it; but it is quite possible that we may have no right to do so. Perhaps, after all, it was not the "blind" local practitioner with the "abhorred shears" who "slit the thin-spun life," when he only meant to perform that office for the membrane of the mouth. It is not at all certain that our visitor would have lived even if he had been enabled to take food; we do not know, indeed, that he would have consented to take food, or in any manner to have prolonged a life which certainly would have been very unlike that of his earlier years, and which only human vanity assumes to be superior to it. No doubt it would be the heaviest of blows to that vanity to believe that there could be a moment's doubt on the matter. "Better seventy hours of Greenock, than a cycle in the clay." Such—adapting the words of Lord TENNYSON's hero—would be the sentiment of most of us; but it may very well be doubted whether, as a race, we should be wise in selecting the disappointed lover of "Locksley Hall" for a champion. The toad, if he were put to it, might find a good deal to say of a character unflattering to the self-esteem of that somewhat priggish young gentleman, who, indeed, it is to be noticed, has grown wise with old age, and evidently thinks much less in his old age—or did when last heard of through his illustrious creator—of this "so-called nineteenth century" than he did in the days of his youth. It is, unfortunately, impossible to collect the toad's opinion on this or any other subject. We can only endeavour to imagine "how it strikes" a batrachian emerging from the clay, somewhere about the time of his twenty thousandth birthday. And certainly we must admit to ourselves that, if a "visit of surprise" was fated to be paid us by a creature from an earlier world, we could have selected a happier moment for it than the present. The toad has taken us a little "in the rough" so to speak, and it is idle, we are afraid, to hope that our era can by any possibility vie with the various geological periods with which he is able to compare it. If Nature brings not back the mastodon, human nature, we regret to say, is particularly fertile just at present in the generation of monsters of another kind. We forget the exact date of our pre-adamite visitor's appearance, but we are inclined to think that he emerged from the clay about the time when tongues of men were busy over two of the most ghastly murders of the century, and we are not at all sure that in his short super-terranean life of three days he did not see the number doubled. Add to this that the air was full of the Irish question, of tedious speeches upon it, and of more to come, and it may be well be imagined that a toad of taste found our modern life a bad exchange for the tranquillity of his clayey cell, and died disgusted and indignant.

If that, indeed, were the case, it is easy enough to account for his hurried departure. Even in the most savage struggles of the early world he can have seen nothing like our East-end tragedies; he might well look back regretfully to the days of the "dragons of the prime, Who tore each other in the slime," and welcome his removal from among a race of creatures so much more cruel than any which his long experience enabled him to recall. It is not necessary, however, to suppose that the late lamented Bufo has been shocked by any such accidental and abnormal horrors into quitting us in this hasty fashion. To assume that this must be the case is only another and more subtle suggestion of human vanity. What it implies is that, barring the exceptional enormities of which some few of them are guilty, mankind are, on the whole, a race with whom it is "promotion" for a prehistoric toad to associate, and the earth peopled by them a place of abode to be greatly preferred to the geologic clay. These assumptions, however, we are not by any means entitled to make; or, even if we think ourselves at all justified in supposing that our visitor must have recognised our superiority to himself in certain respects, we are not in the least warranted in presuming either that he considered, or that he ought to have considered, these points of superiority to be of sufficient importance to lend attraction to a permanent residence among us. In a certain superficial alertness of intelligence he may have recognised our claims to precedence; but what about solidity of character—what about patience, resignation, contentment with simple pleasures, capacity of meditation, immunity from the insatiable craving for change and for excitement? Surely, in comparing himself with man on points like these, the released recluse might be excused a certain complacency. Is there any one, he might ask himself, among this noisy, restless, striving, struggling horde who could have stood that twenty thousand years of mine in the clay? And, if he did ask himself such a question, it is impossible to doubt that even his short experience of it must have enabled him to answer. Three days of human society even at Greenock should be quite enough to satisfy an intelligent toad that man is not to be taken at his own exorbitant valuation of himself; that, with some engaging qualities, he has others which thoroughly unfit him for the position in which he finds himself, and that, as regards tranquillity of mind and self-possession of soul, he is getting further and further, every decade, from that true model of these qualities which had just turned up for his benefit out of the clay of the railway-cutting at Greenock. It is only too probable, we fear, that it was in the first emotion of disgust at this discovery that our visitor has taken his departure. Let his urn be inscribed with the epitaph, "He lived twenty thousand years in the clay, and would have been content to dwell there for ever. He passed three days among mankind—and found that was enough."

ACCORDING to the Calendar we have yet three weeks to wait for St. Hubert's Day; although there is no historical proof that the celebrated hunting saint in question was born or died on the 3rd of November. The Bollandists, however, have come to a convenient agreement that the third day of the eleventh month should be the saint's festival, on the ground that it is "on account of some translation in his episcopal sees." French legislation has allowed a margin somewhat more elastic than that laid down in the Lives of the Saints for the opening of the hunting season. If the harvest, for example, is very late "La Grande Chasse" must be deferred until after all the corn is carried; while the same rule applies to the vintage, no pack of hounds being permitted to come within a prescribed distance of a district where the grapes are still on the vine. Between mid-October and early November is, however, the period when the French NIMROD usually mounts his steed, and listens for the baying of the pack and the cheerful "Hallali!" of the hunting horn. Now is or should be, according to Mr. WILLIAM SOMERVILLE, Gent., in his enlivening poem of "The Chace," the season when "golden autumn from her open lap Her fragrant bounty showers; the fields are shorn; Inwardly smiling the proud farmer views The rising pyramids that grace his yard, And counts his large increase; his barns are stored, And groaning staddles bend beneath their load." The bard goes on to tell us that at the beginning of the hunting season "all is free as air, and the gay pack, In the rough, bristly stubble, range unblamed." No widows' tears, Mr. SOMERVILLE incidentally mentions, o'erflow. "No secret curse Swells in the farmer's breast, which his pale lips, Trembling, conceal, by his fierce landlord awed." On the contrary, the proud farmer politely levels every fence, "joins in the common cry and hallo loud, Charmed with the rattling thunder of the field." It is most devoutly to be hoped that such is the case in France, where, in the matter of hunting, "all is free as air," subject only to the trifling conditions that every sportsman must obtain a "permis de chasse," and that he must not ride over his neighbour's land in pursuit of game without obtaining the express consent of the owner. The departments, save in the regions devastated by the floods, are in capital condition for hunting; and our Paris Correspondent informs us that at no time, in spite of revolution upon revolution and the levelling tendencies of Democracy, has sport on the grandest scale been more keenly pursued by rural magnates than it is at present.

France now possesses upwards of three hundred packs of hounds, from the forty or fifty couples kept by some territorial aristocrat down to the dozen couple or so of active sturdy animals kept by the old-fashioned country gentleman of Brittany, the Legitimist province par excellence. It is impossible at the same time entirely to dissociate politics from that which, to a great extent, must be considered the revival of hunting in France. The Radicals, as a rule, are either wholly indifferent to or heartily detest the noble art of venery, since, cruel as our own game laws were, those of France were, prior to the Revolution, positively ferocious in their severity. Hunting in England, as SOMERVILLE has poetically put it, rarely bore hardly on the farmer or the peasant. Both loved the healthy and exhilarating sport, and could participate in it in degree as fully as the lord or the squire did. It was only when the King's venison was in question that, in the way of hunting, the tenant or the labourer went in fear; for the grim Black Act made it death without benefit of clergy to go abroad at night in any way disguised in pursuit of deer. Poaching in preserves was the offence most harshly punished by the game laws. In France the hunting of big game, as well as of small, was a privilege arrogantly monopolised by the Crown and the great nobilities. Landlords were not permitted to hunt or to snare game on their own lands without paying a heavy fine to the "capitainerie" of the province; and there were at least twenty offences arising from the game laws which, in the reign of LOUIS XIV., were punishable with death. The upheaval of 1789 made a clean sweep of this merciless legislation, and by a decree of the Constituent Assembly every French citizen was allowed to hunt or to shoot wheresoever he pleased. It was speedily found, however, that this liberty was apt to degenerate into licence; and in 1810 and 1844 laws were passed modifying the liberty of the chase and making the penalties for trespass more stringent. Thus, hunting in those departments where the land is cut up into an infinity of small freeholds is sometimes surrounded by considerable difficulties. The great packs of which our Correspondent speaks are, as a rule, used in hunting on the estates of great landowners or in the forests of the State, the sporting rights in which have been leased by private individuals or by syndicates. The grandest hunting spectacles are those organised by the grands seigneurs, whose châteaux are surrounded by extensive domains leased by farmers, who are only too happy to give all hunting facilities to the nobles, whom they still look upon as their feudal chiefs. There is an immense amount of conservatism in rural France; and the noble masters of foxhounds, be they Legitimists or Bonapartists, tacitly combine, by their ardent patronage of field sports, in protesting against the ways of the Republic. Democracy does not care about sport, and very often laughs mercilessly at the sportsman, who, when he goes out shooting, is generally represented by the Parisian comic draughtsman as being desperately short-sighted, and more prone to lodge the contents of his gun in the body of his own dog than in that of a pheasant or a hare. Ample pictorial justice is rendered, it is true, to the elaborate "make-up" of the chasseur himself, who is usually represented in a brigand hat with a feather in it, a velveteen jerkin, and gaiters reaching mid-thigh, while at his side there hangs a leathern game-bag covered with intricate network and adorned with a profusion of knots, loops, tags, and tassels. Occasionally Monsieur is accompanied by Madame his wife, with the daintiest of fowling-pieces under one arm, and attired in a jockey-cap, a tastefully-smocked blouse, knickerbockers, and leggings. For the technical proficiency of the sportsman the Parisian artist has not the slightest sympathy; nay, he more than insinuates that if this ACTÆON of the boulevards leaves home in the morning with an empty game-bag, and returns at night with a "gibecière" teeming with fur and feathered game, it is with silver bullets that he has shot his quarry; that is to say, that he has purchased them at a convenient poulterer's.

We are not quite exempt in England from this tendency to laugh at the French sportsman. The admirable JOHN LEECH could rarely find a more favourite subject for his pencil than that of the lively Gaul, stout, black-bearded, booted, buckskinned, and in orthodox pink, following the hounds in England. He was frequently thrown—he came the awfullest croppers; but he always turned up again smiling, and, although with battered hat and mud-bespattered raiment, continued to urge on his wild career. When he was derisively asked whether he thought that he should get at the fox before the hounds, he gleefully rubbed his hands and responded, "I do not know, but by gar I vill try." It was not, it is true, mere Podsnappery that made LEECH laugh at the corpulent Frenchman who rode to hounds. He had laughed quite as good-humouredly at Mr. JORROCKS and Mr. SOAPY SPONGE, just as SEYMOUR before him had laughed at the cockney sportsman who, all unwittingly, was the first cause of "Pickwick." It was not the caricaturist's business to know that hunting in its grandest form was perfected in this country by certain Norman barons, who were good enough to come over to England in the train of WILLIAM the Conqueror. They found such happy hunting-grounds in rural England that they could not be persuaded to return to their own charming province of Normandy, and so delighted were they with our pleasantly undulating shires that they kept the amusement of hunting entirely to themselves, and merrily hanged such of the Saxon churls who dared to poach upon the manors which they had stolen from the churls aforesaid. That eminent master of deerhounds, WILLIAM RUFUS, destroyed smiling villages by the score, and deported rustics by the thousand, in order to form the New Forest, in which his passionate admiration for the chase terminated in a manner with which every schoolboy is familiar. In point of fact, the French were our instructors in hunting, and when good King JOHN of France was a prisoner at Hereford he occupied his leisure by hunting and by reading treaties on venery. A contemporary writer estimated at twenty thousand the number of French gentlemen who kept packs of hounds, and one authority went so far as to declare that the fox-hound itself had been originally imported from Tartary by a French seigneur. So vast were the sums spent on the chase in mediæval times by the French aristocracy that LOUIS XII. used to compare his nobles to so many ACTÆONS devoured by their dogs. At the present time hunting in France may be broadly defined under two categories. There is first the "Grande Chasse," formerly Royal, subsequently Imperial, and now only Conservative. NAPOLEON III. revived the Grande Chasse at Fontainebleau with brilliant éclat. The Emperor and the gentlemen of the hunt wore uniforms of green and gold, with three-cornered hats, buckskins, and jack-boots. The huntsmen carried huge centrifugal horns, which encircled their chests, and, when the hunt was over and the deer had been caught and slain, there was a grand curée or cutting-up of the carcase by torchlight in the courtyard of the château. The more devout among the sportsmen used to resort, before starting, to the Imperial chapel, there to hear a "Messe de St. Hubert," or hunting mass, the shortest function of the kind, although sporting purists pointed out that the Fontainebleau masses lacked one orthodox element in the absence of the hounds who, in mediæval times, were trained to howl in almost psalmodic harmony. The second category of modern French hunting is that which is based on a more or less faithful imitation of English practice in the field. The fox is the usual quarry; the gentlemen turn out in pink, and the ladies in habits with scarlet vests, and on chill days in covert coats. Nor in these amusing simulacra of an English meet is a functionary "le vipperinne" forgotten. Whether "le cropperre," or "le check," or the "contrétraille," have yet been introduced into the French hunting vocabulary, or whether French sporting authorities have agreed to discriminate between the casting off of harriers and the throwing off of foxhounds, time will show; but it is, at all events, very gratifying to learn that our French neighbours are busy in keeping up a good old sport which, as we have shown, they pursued to admiration hundreds of years ago.

DEATH OF MR. J. M. LEVY.

With the deepest sorrow we are called upon to chronicle the death, after a long illness, of Mr. J. M. Levy, one of the chief proprietors and one, also, of the most active directors—since its foundation—of The Daily Telegraph. Mr. Levy passed away peacefully yesterday at his seaside residence, Florence Cottage, Ramsgate, surrounded by his children and by various members of his family. The deceased gentleman was in his seventy-seventh year, having been born in London in 1812. He was educated at Bruce Castle and in Germany, and the earlier years of his life were spent in commercial pursuits. During the past half-century, however, his tastes, inclinations, and an intuitive genius for such work induced him to turn his attention to journalism. In many undertakings of this description he had been conspicuously successful; but more than thirty years ago he gave up several such enterprises of a promising and remunerative character, and devoted all his time and capacity to the development of The Daily Telegraph, in the interests of which he laboured without flagging almost to the hour of his death. A minute description of his special qualifications for the performance of this particular duty is scarcely called for in these columns. The powerful work accomplished day by day for so many years furnishes sufficient evidence of the ability of those who have borne a chief part in its completion. Of the true value of that work, and of its productiveness in connection with the record of politics, art, literature, and science, the English people are—and must always be—the best and the truest judges. For this reason there will be many ready sympathisers to-day with those who, in heartfelt sincerity and affection, mourn for the irreparable loss they have sustained. Most tender in nature, strong and determined in character, with the keen wisdom of an experienced man of the world and the cultivated tastes of an accomplished gentleman, remembering with marvellous accuracy all the principal events of the last sixty years, never forgetting the ties and claims of kinship or of friendship, ardently loved by a large family circle and by all sorts and conditions of men, there has quietly passed away to his rest one, who, with no ostentation and no self-seeking, has had much to do, in a spirit of honour and fearlessness, with many of the main incidents of the nineteenth century.

PARIS DAY BY DAY.

[BY SPECIAL WIRE.]

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

PARIS, FRIDAY NIGHT.

Parisians are now badly in want of a new sensation. The trial of the notorious swindler Allmayer was but the talk of an hour, and public interest in the case was decidedly less to-day. Even the cries of the camelots, which formerly announced a new sensation every hour at least, are regretted by some, for the familiar resonance made the Boulevards lively, and generally caused people to prick up their ears in the expectation of something startling. Unluckily, however, when the ukase relative to the hawkers was issued, the bonâ-fide vendors of news had to be silenced as well as the criers of canards and the pedlars of impurities, who were the real scourges. Thus there is manifestly something gone from the bustle and movement of the Boulevards, and no sound now falls on the ear save the eternal and monotonous rumble of traffic. In the absence of anything exceptionally new, attractive, or sensational, considerable satisfaction and compensation were derivable to-day from the agreeable weather. The landscape was pervaded by an autumnal mellowness of tint, while the air was mild and at the same time exhilarating. Everybody who could afford the time was out enjoying the sunshine, and even the tawdry fête which is taking place on the site once occupied by the Palace of the Tuileries received large contingents of visitors.

Simultaneously with the accounts of Kaiser William's entry into Rome comes the news that the Italian Consul-General at Tunis has instructed the directors of the Italian schools in the Regency to hold firm, and to decline to permit the local inspectors to visit their establishments. The Italian Government is said to have decided on the appointment of a special inspector for these schools, basing its decision on the rights conferred upon it by the Capitulations, and in the meantime some comment has been excited by the fact that the new Italian school that has just been opened has been named after Signor Crispi. The French authorities, who had insisted on their right to take the Italian schools under their control, rendering the study of the French language compulsory, regard all this as a defiance, and an aggravation of an already strained situation. There is, however, no doubt that the Italian Government will adhere to its standpoint, maintaining that French officials in the Regency have no right to meddle with its schools, which are important institutions attended by thousands of pupils versed only in the tongue of Tasso. In short, the cry emanating from Rome is "Hands off!" nor can it be said that the old rivalry between the two Powers in Tunis received its death-blow with the signature of the Bardo Treaty.

It has been stated in some of the French papers that Lord Lytton would speak at the inauguration of the statue which has been erected at the junction of the Boulevard Haussmann and the Avenue de Messine. It is quite true that a proposition to this effect has been made to his Excellency, but I have reason to believe that Lord Lytton, thinking that it would be unfitting for an English Ambassador to appear at any public ceremony taking place on Sunday, has declined to attend. I may add that the statue has been unveiled since yesterday, although it is not to be inaugurated till Sunday next.

M. Floquet adheres to his Revision programme, and is prepared to stand or fall according to the reception which the Chamber of Deputies may accord to it. This fact is now clear, and this is something on the eve of the reassembling of Parliament. As to the programme itself, it is hardly calculated to please those politicians who, like the Boulangists, have been clamouring for wholesale revision; it is not comprehensive enough for their views. As I gave you to understand some time ago, M. Floquet aims solely at the Senate. He would curtail the prerogatives of the Upper House, especially in financial matters; but he has no idea of suggesting that the President of the Republic be improved off the face of the earth, nor will he hear of the creation of a Constituante, or single chamber. In short, he hopes to conciliate the Moderate Republicans with a not too sweeping programme, while he trusts that the agitators for revision will be quieted for a time. Possibly, however, M. Floquet may fall between two stools. The Opportunists are dead against change in whatever shape, and regard the bringing forward of any kind of revision project at this juncture as an imprudent step which may open the door to a whole series of dangerous attacks on the existing régime; but M. Floquet has made up his mind, and although he affects to be indifferent to the attitude which the Senate may assume, he is determined to retire from office if he do not command a majority in the Chamber. Oddly enough, the President of the Council is by no means eager for the immediate discussion of his Revision Bill by the Congress at Versailles assembled. On the contrary, he is anxious that the debate may be postponed until the Estimates shall have been voted. Then, and not till then, would he take the matter seriously in hand. It really looks as if the Premier wished to silence the agitators for revision at the outset by showing that he had done what he could. He may calculate that, in spite of the Moderates, his bill may be favourably received by the Chamber, and as he probably looks forward to its interment by the Senate, he may argue that no harm will have been done. Yet it is no secret that M. Floquet is acting in direct opposition to the views of M. Carnot, who has returned to Paris more convinced than ever of the imprudence of the measure, after losing no opportunity during his visits to Lyons, Annecy, and Dijon, of impressing Republicans with the importance of keeping together as one man, and of suffering no jarring note to aggravate their dissensions. M. Gellibert des Seguins, a Reactionary deputy, has informed M. Floquet of his intention to put a question to him respecting his revision schemes; but, as the leading members of the Right have not even been consulted by their colleague, this may be regarded as an isolated step on the part of M. Gellibert des Seguins, and as affording no clue whatever to the eventual attitude of the Royalist and Bonapartist deputies.

M. Clémenceau is scouring his department, the Var, and the speech which he delivered last night at Barjols was by no means the least interesting of the series. The leader of the Extreme Left vigorously attacked General Boulanger. His feelings must resemble those of Frankenstein after he had endowed the monster of his creation with life. He described the agitation as due to the sudden infatuation of the ignorant section of the peasantry and working classes for "a mutinous soldier with no past and no probable future." Then, turning to the Reactionaries, M. Clémenceau said that it was strange indeed to see them leave their ranks to follow the Boulangist clique; but, more curious still, he sarcastically added, "we behold a Prince who ought to be our Sovereign Philippe VII., Comte de Paris, acting as the corporal of M. Boulanger. The pretender writes with his Royal hand that the Conservatives ought to range themselves boldly under the banner of M. Boulanger. Yet these two pretenders are not pursuing the same object. One is deceiving the other. Which is it? Ask M. Boulanger." Their connecting link was revision. He (M. Clémenceau) was also a devoted partisan of revision, but theirs was very different from his. That for which General Boulanger clamoured might be summed up in Siéyès' mot: "Boulanger is nothing. He wants to be everything. It is the dictatorship." The cry of "Vive le Roi!" at least meant something. It evoked a glorious past. That of "Vive Boulanger!" had no meaning, and was an affront to the Republic. Was the great Revolutionary movement of 1789, in which France emancipated the peoples, to end in Boulanger? "If our fathers ascended the scaffold, if they were executed, was it for Boulanger? No; it was for the Republic. It is not General Boulanger who bears the standard of the Republic. On the contrary, allied with all its enemies, he wants to take possession of it." M. Clémenceau's sharp and incisive phrases were repeatedly applauded, and at the close of his speech a resolution expressing approval of his attitude was unanimously voted. The General has now no more bitter adversary than his former friend and admirer.

To-day public interest in the trial of Allmayer, the handsome swindler, slackened a little. Nevertheless the assize court of the Seine was tolerably well filled, and many of the fair and frail ones of the Quartier de l'Europe trooped down after luncheon in order to have a look at the prisoner, known to many of them as a wealthy nobleman and a "devil-may-care" gambler who lost innumerable louis at seaside casinos, and when he won was lavish with bank notes and jewellery. The excellent young man, pseudo-count, professional swindler, and marvellous mystifier of turnkeys and detectives, was as calm, cool, and self-possessed as usual. He is a splendid comedian, and went through his rôle of denying in the most emphatic manner everything brought against him with consummate art. He juggled with the judge and amazed the auditors by the nimbleness and audacity with which he evaded leading questions or kept to his original plan of turning the tables on his accusers, by making them the culprits, and by representing himself as an injured innocent, who was being offered up to atone for the shortcomings of somebody else. There is nothing more farcical at the first blush than a trial of this description, wherein the judge proves the case to be as clear as noonday against the culprit, who on his side tries to protect himself as with a foil from the blows of a sledge hammer, the audience all the while listening gravely to judge and prisoner and laughing hugely at the funny points. The cases against Allmayer, three in number, have been proved over and over again, yet the prisoner both yesterday and to-day continued his fencing as if he were sure of ultimately gaining a victory over the wielder of the sledge-hammer. M. Khan, the banker with whom Allmayer negotiated a bill drawn on London, was the first witness called. He explained how the swindler had spoken to him through the telephone in the name of M. Edmond Kastor, and then notified through his counsel that he had withdrawn from his plaint against the prisoner, whose father had refunded him the money which had been fraudulently obtained. M. Edmond Kastor deposed, amid considerable amusement, how Allmayer had made him responsible for the telephone trick, and Allmayer's accomplice, Plivard, who is in prison, was then called. Plivard appeared in the dock in prison garb, and gave evidence relative to the telephone trick. He said that after the tape was cut, and the bills negotiated by M. Kahn, Allmayer gave him £240 out of the £1,600 which had been obtained, and then decamped with a woman. To all this Allmayer boldly gave the lie, asserting that it was Plivard who had telephoned to M. Kahn. The judge next read out the depositions of the woman Mincke, who was Plivard's mistress. She said that she first met Plivard in the summer of 1886. He was then poor and badly dressed, but in September of the same year he came to her mieux nippé, or "better rigged out," jingled gold in his pocket, and bought bracelets for her. Allmayer came with him one day and gave the frail deponent bonbons. The depositions of the telegraph officials who saw Allmayer and Plivard using M. Kastor's telephone were then taken, and M. Villers, the magistrate whose name Allmayer appended to the warrant under which he escaped from Mazas, was next called. He stated that while he and his registrar were examining some documents together in the twilight Allmayer's agile fingers seized the seal, affixed it to the warrant, and then signed witness's name. The signature was, however, badly imitated, and it was inconceivable to witness how the gaol authorities had not noticed it. Both M. Villers and his registrar emphatically asserted that no one entered the room where they were with Allmayer, and that Darmoy, the person who, according to the swindler, had forged the warrant was a mythical individual. M. Four, the head gaoler of Mazas, deposed that he liberated Allmayer on the order being presented to him, but he first had an understanding on the subject with the governor, who has since died. The remainder of the sitting was occupied with the hearing of the witnesses in the Alfassa or Morocco affair, a transaction by which Allmayer raised money on the strength of a sham contract for the supply of rifles to the Sultan of Morocco. After this the Court adjourned until to-morrow.

For some weeks past there has been talk of an approaching marriage between Mademoiselle Marcelle Boulanger, the younger daughter of the General, and Captain Driant, of the Fourth Zouaves, now stationed in Tunis. The captain, who is still under thirty, was for five years aide-de-camp to General Boulanger, and the gossips averred that the only obstacle to the match was to be found in the fact that, if M. Driant's liking for the daughter had increased, his enthusiasm for the father had diminished during the past twelvemonth, and that on this account the General might not care to welcome him as a son-in-law. Politics, in short, had thrown a shadow on the little romance, but it was understood that the difficulty might not be insuperable, and that on his return to Paris General Boulanger might be induced to give his consent to the nuptials. He has not kept the young couple long in suspense, for to-night it is officially announced that the wedding is to come off on the 30th instant, if the permission of the General commanding the troops in Tunis arrive in time. A comic print, by the way, appears to-day with an amusing joke at the General's expense. A lieutenant, examined as to his fitness to promotion, is asked what he would do if—all his superiors having fallen on the battle-field—he found himself at the head of an army corps. "I should at once put myself up for election in all the Departments" is the prompt and decided reply. The amazement of the officers conducting the examination may well be imagined.

Last evening took place the rehearsal of the new opera, "Jocelyn," with which the Théâtre-Lyrique, in its reconstructed form, is about to open its winter campaign. The Nouveau Théâtre-Lyrique has now migrated to the remotely situated Théâtre du Château d'Eau, and every seat was occupied at the rehearsal as though it had been a public performance. Although "Jocelyn" is new to the Parisian public the performance was not, strictly speaking, a première, seeing that M. Godard's opera was originally brought out at the Theatre de la Monnaie in Brussels this spring. One of the librettists, the constructor of the scenario, indeed, is M. Capoul, the tenor singer, for whom the rôle of the hero was expressly written. He sang last evening with all the extraordinary passion and fire which made him, so long as he was at the Opéra Comique, the most popular tenor in France. Although his voice is not so uniformly sweet as it was twenty years ago, he still proves himself in every phrase to be a consummate artist; while for intensity of expression he has no rival on the operatic stage. The entire performance was eminently satisfactory, and it gave immense pleasure to the enthusiastic audience.

Parisians have been very nearly enjoying the sensation of a genuine and actual female duel. Two young women really confronted each other in the Wood of Meudon, provided with rapiers, and all ready to use their weapons to the best of their ability and address. It happened in this way. One of the aforesaid fair ones was on intimate terms with a gay Parisian, to whom in a weak moment she introduced the friend who was afterwards to face her on the ground. The friend took a fancy to her protector, he reciprocated the sentiment, and it ended by the gentleman bidding adieu to the old love and taking up with the new. Bitter feelings rankled in the bosom of the discarded flame, and on Wednesday morning, chancing to meet her false friends in the street, she treated the girl to a sound box on the ear. An encounter was hastily arranged between the women, in spite of the remonstrances of the gentleman, and in the afternoon the rivals repaired to the wood at Meudon to fight their quarrel out. They had, however, reckoned without their host. The gentleman, determined to avert bloodshed at all costs, adopted the heroic measure of reporting the whole affair to the police. So just as the two girls were stationed, rapier in hand, on a convenient bit of greensward all ready for the fray, the gendarmes pounced down upon them, disarmed them, and marched them off to the police magistrate, who read them a severe lecture. Their weapons were confiscated, and the duel, nipped in the bud, fell through altogether.

M. Goron, head of the Paris detective department, has received a letter, which is evidently intended to be a grim joke, from a disciple of Jack the Ripper. The communication is dated from Brest, and in it the writer says that the Whitechapel murders were committed by his colleague and himself, and that they intend to startle Paris with a series of similar atrocities. "We are looking for something in the human body which medical science has never found yet. Our first victim will be a woman between twenty and thirty years old. You can send all the policemen in Paris after us, but they will not be able to catch us. Operations to be begun three weeks hence, at least.—Signed, H. L. P. C." The letter is dated the 9th inst. Its concoctor incidentally mentions that he and the Ripper have murdered women in New York as well as in London.

On the Bourse to-day the last quotations were: Three per Cents., 82f 35c (a fall of 12½c); Four and a Half per Cents., 105f 50c (a fall of 2½c); Italians, 96f 87½c (a fall of 22½c); Turks, 15f 42½c (a fall of 2½c); Spanish Exteriors, 73f 35c; Egyptian Unified, 426f 25c; ditto Preference, 522f; Ottoman Bank, 537f. Suez Canal shares closed at 2,225f, and Rio Tinto at 600f. There was a fall to-day in Three per Cents., and Four and a Half per Cents. were dull. But Italians and Spanish Exteriors, the latter of which closed with a fall of 55c, were most affected by the downward tendency. A leading financial journal takes the opportunity of remarking to-night that this fall in Italians need surprise no one, as they are still far too high, when the financial position of the Kingdom, the commercial struggle with France, and Signor Crispi's sinister attitude towards the Republic are taken into consideration. This cut at Italians is evidently inspired by the German Emperor's visit to Rome. Hungarians and Portuguese were also weak, but Egyptian Unified and the Russian Loan of 1880 have not lost ground. There was a fall of 3f 75c in Suez Canal shares. On the Petite Bourse to-night the closing prices were: Spanish Exteriors, 73f 67c; Egyptian Unified, 425f 62c; Ottoman Bank, 538f 12c; and Rio Tinto, 605f.

Lady Elizabeth Marjory Murray, who died suddenly at Windsor, on Thursday, was the daughter of Mr. George Fairholme, of Greenknowe, and married in 1851 the late Lord James Charles Plantagenet Murray, brother of the Sixth Duke of Atholl.

KAISER, KING, AND POPE.

[FROM OUR SPECIAL CORRESPONDENT.]

ROME, OCT. 9.

Within the past twenty-four hours representatives of every newspaper-reading nationality in Europe have been pouring into Rome by all the railway lines that communicate with foreign parts, and "the cry is still, they come!" more especially with respect to members of the Fourth Estate. The local Press Association has generously and most courteously thrown open its spacious and comfortable set of rooms, near the Italian House of Commons, to journalists of all races, creeds, and political persuasions, who enjoy therein the privileges accorded by London clubs to their members, save and except that of eating and drinking at their own expense. They have been made free of drawing rooms, reading rooms, writing rooms, card rooms, and well-stocked libraries alike; their Roman colleagues are never weary of asking them to drain beakers of Vienna or Munich beer, and they are encouraged—nay, positively solicited with passionate earnestness—to smoke all over the premises. From an English point of view there are decided shortcomings in the editing, make-up, and production of Italian newspapers; but the frank hospitality, genuine geniality, and thorough bonne camaraderie of Italian journalists leave their alien brethren of the pen nothing to desire, and very much to be grateful for. Strolling into the Association's headquarters, rather late yesterday evening, I found there assembled as polyglotic a Tobacco-Parliament of the elect, so happily described by Mr. Thomas Trollope at Milan some years ago as "the high priests of human intelligence, duly anointed with that sacred unguent, printer's ink," as I had ever hitherto foregathered with. With justifiable pride, the amiable secretary of the institution showed me his list of visitors, "del mestiere," the entries in which covered a dozen or so of folio pages. There I read the names of journalistic envoys from every European country, far and near (except Turkey and Servia), and from lands beyond the sea; from Spain, Portugal, France, Germany, Austria, Hungary, Greece, Roumania, Denmark, Sweden, Belgium, Holland, and our own "tight little island," from ever so many of the United States, and even one or two purporting to hail from India and Australia. Amongst them were those of generals, colonels, barons, commanders and knights of many Orders, doctors of law and philosophy (Germans these, to a man), a few stray members of Continental Parliaments and Diets, and half-a-dozen or so well-known draughtsmen and caricaturists. I was heartily greeted by more than one old comrade of days gone by, who had fought hard in bitter frays of which I had been only a spectator, sharing their dangers but none of their glories. For example, here was a dashing Prussian ex-cavalry captain, who commanded a battalion of Servian militia at Alexinatz, and all but lost his life in endeavouring to prevent his men from taking to their heels when they came under Turkish fire—one who, moreover, stuck to poor Fred Burnaby "like a man" throughout the last Carlist war, and saw some uncommonly hard fighting both in the Herzegovina (1875), and with the Roumanian "contingent" before Plevna two years later. Hungarian and Italian patriots of still more ancient renown—heroes of the '48 and '49 revolutions—were also among the Association's journalistic guests; men grown grey in the anti-official service of their respective countries, and who, since Hungary and Italy came to their own in the way of freedom and independence, have exchanged their unpaid swords for well-remunerated pens.

The German press has sent hither an unusually strong detachment of its ready writers to describe the reception of the young Emperor at the hands—strictly speaking—of the Italian public, which, when pleasurably moved, rarely cheers with anything like impressive unanimity, but expresses its contentment by a vigorous "battemani," or clapping with the hands. So important appears the Imperial visit, from a national point of view, to Italian minds, that well-nigh every large provincial city of the Peninsula will be journalistically represented here by "specials" during the sojourn of William II. in this capital. It is, of course, possible that Italian politicians and editors exaggerate the significance of the event; but at least I can tell you pretty exactly what they think about it. Since my arrival here I have climbed stairs enough—a process indispensable to the obtaining of information in Rome—to qualify me for membership of the Alpine Club, and have culled an abundant crop of political opinions at singularly inconvenient altitudes above the level of the sea, from persons in authority who, I cannot help thinking, establish their official residences on high, as the eagle does his eyrie, in the fond hope of discouraging over-inquisitive visitors. Were this not so, why should an Under-Secretary of State, up to whose "mansion in the sky" I painfully toiled last Sunday afternoon, have selected for his departmental abode the seventh storey of a palace which, when I had reached its top floor, conveyed to me the impression of being at least seven thousand feet high? "Excelsior" is the word here, from rosy morn to dewy eve, for one whose "dreadful trade" it is to elicit "views" from official personages and exalted—very much exalted—politicians.

Having spent many hours with this object, in ascending tortuous and apparently interminable flights of stone steps, I have found that a consensus of opinion prevails among Italians of light and leading, supporters and opponents of the Ministry alike, to the effect that the Kaiser's visit to King Humbert is an event to be regarded by the Italian nation with unqualified satisfaction, as an Imperial seal set upon the "understanding" between this country and the Central European Allies, and by Europe in general with profound gratification, as a distinct assurance that the general peace will not be disturbed for some years to come. The staunchest and most influential supporters of the Crispi Administration in this city frankly admit that Italian susceptibilities have of late been ruffled by France, and vice versâ, somewhat inconsiderately. A situation having thus been brought about which they describe as "embarrassing," Prince Bismarck's advice was solicited and granted. Italy was counselled to moderate her irritability and to display a conciliatory spirit. She was informed that she must not expect any encouragement from Germany, her sincere friend and well-wisher, in cultivating a squabble with France which might develope into a serious quarrel, inasmuch as the Emperor William was resolved to keep peace on the Continent to the best of his ability, and not to allow the German nation to be drawn into any foreign complications not immediately threatening or affecting its own interests. In a word, the traditional Bismarckian "Kalter Wasserstrahl," or jet of cold water, was turned upon a certain excitable Italian statesman, with the prompt effect of damping his controversial ardour, and changing his provocative attitude into one of academical calmness. No humble pie had actually to be eaten, I am assured, for a cooling aspersion was administered by the same judicious hand to another Continental Government which has of late shown a laudable willingness to receive and follow "friendly" advice tendered to it at the instance of Prince Bismarck. A discussion which was beginning to assume an angry aspect was simply allowed to drop, and "as you were" became the order of the day. I have good reason to believe that this is really the last word of the recent Franco-Italian "difficulty," and of its solution; which latter, happily, is an accomplished fact.

My Italian friends, however, more particularly the governmental ones, say, "We have observed to the letter the wise counsels with which we have been favoured, and are rewarded for our amenability to reason by an appreciable strengthening of the bonds that have hitherto, from the military as well as the political point of view, connected Italy with Germany. To us, the Emperor's visit is an open, unreserved recognition of our right to reckon upon the German alliance as a tower of strength. We are as eager for the maintenance of peace as the German Emperor and nation can possibly be; but it is a great comfort to us to know that, should the French go out of their way to pick a gratuitous quarrel with us, we can positively count upon a backer of such strength that France will think at least three times before she makes up her mind to face him. The Kaiser's visit to our capital, so soon after his father's death, means a good deal more than a mere act of lofty courtesy to our excellent King, who represents the Italian nation with unexceptionable dignity and discretion. It is a plain notification to the rest of Europe that, under the new Hohenzollern reign, Germany and Italy are agreed to go hand-in-hand, through weal or woe, and that, as the old proverb says, 'he who lends a box on the ear to one may expect a slap in the face from the other.' We shall take good care not to involve Germany in any avoidable difficulty; but, should we be unrighteously and unreasonably assaulted, we feel confident that she will stand by us through thick and thin; and we hail the Emperor's visit with cordial rejoicing as a conclusive proof that our confidence in him and in his people is solidly founded."

All promises well for the brilliancy of the fêtes arranged to take place in the honour of the Emperor, with the exception of one important element of success, as far as open-air entertainments and displays are concerned—to wit, the weather, which, alas! has behaved in the most reprehensible manner since my arrival in the Eternal City. Until last Saturday, so I am told, gorgeous sunshine, spotless blue skies, and a delightful temperature had prevailed without interruption for weeks upon weeks. On Sunday formidable symptoms of a change for the worse made their appearance towards sundown, and during the evening all the old women of the place were set quaking and praying by one of the noisiest and most persistent thunderstorms I have ever witnessed, accompanied by a flood of rain that would have done honour to a British summer day in the height of the London season. This "gran susurro" murdered sleep all night long, and has been renewed at brief intervals during the past forty-eight hours. While I am writing these lines distant thunder is growling away like a discontented lion, and the streets of Rome are experiencing the delights of "washing-day" on a grand scale. If the rain would carry off some of the leading smells, as well as the "unconsidered trifles" that accumulate with such astounding rapidity on the surface of the Roman pavement, I, for one, should be humbly grateful to it. There is one fine old-crusted complex smell, peculiar to Rome, which my nose recognised at once while I was driving from the station to mine inn, although eighteen years had elapsed since last that potent perfume had caused me to blench. It is a subtle combination of stable-yard, roast goose (rather high, and larded with slips of garlic), decayed cheese, and aged dust-heap. Rome has suffered many startling changes under the "Regno;" but she has stuck to her own venerable idiosyncratic reek with a touching fidelity worthy of a less sickly object. The only slight alteration I have as yet been able to detect in the aspect and demeanour of the Roman populace is a somewhat brisker and more debonnair bearing on the part of the younger men, probably the effect of compulsory military service, which has passed many thousands of "giovani Romani" through the drill and exercise mill since Italian institutions were definitively introduced into the Papal States. In other respects the Roman proletary of 1888 is not distinguishable from his forerunner of 1869. Now, as then, his eye is darksomely expressive, darting glances of apparently tremendous significance, which mean nothing in particular. He looks at you as ferociously as though he were thirsting for your heart's-blood; or mysteriously, like a conspirator; or malignantly, like a jealous lover; and all the while he is very likely thinking of yesterday's macaroni, or to-morrow's "terno," or some other mild subject admitting of the most placid consideration. No human being, I should say, could really be throughout life as truculent in thought and merciless in intention as the ordinary Roman loafer appears to be, judged by his fierce expression of countenance and alarming gestures. In reality he is a harmless, good-natured, civil, obliging fellow enough. Why his glances should be withering, and his deportment fateful, I have not the least idea.

ROME, OCT. 10.

At the Vatican, by the express order of his Holiness, the State apartments have been newly furnished—they are eleven in number—and decorated throughout with the most valuable of the pictures, vases, and "art-objects" presented to the venerable Pontiff on the occasion of his Jubilee. Amongst the more striking of these gifts are some gorgeous Oriental carpets, the offering of Morocco's Sultan. The old Papal throne has been replaced by that given to his Holiness by the Artistic-Operative Association of Rome, and the magnificent throne bestowed upon Leo XIII. by the Spanish nation has been set up in the salon in which private conference will be held between Pontiff and Emperor. The entire personnel of the Papal Court, in all its antique splendour, will be assembled to do honour to the Protestant Kaiser: Palatine Guard, with flags and drums (its first appearance in gala array since 1870); Papal gendarmes in the original costume of their corps; the Guardia Nobile, privy chamberlains, camerieri di cappa e spada, officers of the Pontifical Army, bussolanti, ecclesiastic and civil household, princes of the Church, and officers of the Collegio dei Cardinali. The Pope, robed in white and wearing a scarlet "mozzetta," will receive his German Majesty in the great throne-room, whence the two Sovereigns will subsequently retire together to the furthest room of the State suite, there to pass a few minutes tête-à-tête.

That the authorities here desire to impress the minds of the Roman people with a deep sense of the importance of Kaiser Wilhelm's visit is significantly proved by the announcement that the Monte di Pietà, or Government pawnbroking establishment, has resolved to return, free of charge for principal and interest, to their respective owners all objects pledged for sums varying between one and three lire, the tickets of which will expire during his Imperial Majesty's stay in Rome.

The Bishop of London has instituted the Rev. J. M. Andrews to the new vicarage of St. Michael, Highgate; Rev. A. W. Rowe, to the new vicarage of New Brentford; Rev. H. P. Stokes, to the vicarage of Isleworth; and has likewise licensed the Rev. W. C. Gib to be Minister of St. Philip's, Buckingham Palace-road.

The Bishop of Marlborough was yesterday presented with a massive silver salver and silver candlestick, subscribed for by the clergy and laity of the Diocese of Exeter, as a token of their regard and esteem on his resigning the Archdeaconry of Totnes. The presentation was made at the palace by the Bishop of Exeter.

The Queen's buckhounds met in agreeable weather yesterday at Ascot, and continued hunting in the forest country. The quarry—an untried deer—on being released at Winchmore-cross led the pack over the Bagshot district to East Hampstead Park, and thence to Wokingham, near which it was eventually captured, after a splendid run of two hours and a quarter.

RETIREMENT OF SIR JOHN SIMON, M.P.—Yesterday morning a letter was received at Dewsbury from the borough member, Sir John Simon, announcing his intention to retire from Parliament. Sir John says that from the commencement of the recess he has again suffered from severe illness, and he feels he is no longer equal to the wear and tear of Parliamentary life. In duty to his constituents, as well as to his family, he will, on the reassembling of Parliament next month, take steps for vacating his seat. Sir John has represented Dewsbury since it was first constituted a borough in 1868, and has been returned to five successive Parliaments.

THE NEW WIMBLEDON.—A meeting in support of the Staines site for the meetings of the National Rifle Association was held last evening at the Town Hall, Staines. Mr. Pimm presided, and was supported by the Mayor of Windsor and several well-known marksmen, while letters strongly favourable to the site were read from others. The proceedings were of a unanimous character. The following resolutions were passed: "That this meeting is pleased to learn that the council of the National Rifle Association are taking steps to acquire suitable ranges for the annual prize meetings in the proximity of the metropolis, and trusts that the proposed site in the immediate vicinity of Staines may be decided upon; that the inhabitants of Staines and the neighbourhood do cordially welcome the advent of the National Rifle Association and through it the volunteers of Great Britain; and that this meeting trusts the proposed site may also offer the metropolitan volunteers the much-needed accommodation necessary to ensure their efficiency."

TEMPERANCE ON THE RAILWAY.—The sixth anniversary of the United Kingdom Railway Temperance Union was celebrated last evening by the holding of a public meeting at the Holborn Town Hall, under the presidency of Mr. W. Birt, general manager of the Great Eastern Railway, the gathering being attended by a large number of railway men, their wives, and daughters. Inaugurated in 1882, the organisation has made continuous progress, as demonstrated by the circumstance that whilst in 1883 the number of members was 4,504, in 1884 it reached a total of 5,890; in 1885, 7,497; 1886, 10,012; 1887, 11,230; and 1888, 12,578, the latter being comprised in 100 branches distributed throughout the kingdom. The chairman, though not an abstainer himself, declared that intemperance was probably the greatest curse of the present age. Very often it culminated in foul crime, and no one could doubt that it was chiefly responsible for the ghastly horrors which during the last few months had agitated the country. To combat the evil was a severe task, but he advised the union to stick to it. The task commended itself to all right-thinking men, for valuable as temperance was to people in ordinary employment, it was all-important to railway men, the exigencies of whose life were most varied and trying, and upon whose care the safety and comfort of the travelling public depended. Lady Hope, to whom a warm reception was accorded, delivered an address which elicited hearty cheers; and was followed by Dr. B. W. Richardson, who on purely physical grounds advocated the widest dissemination of total abstinence principles among railway servants. Mr. Mark Coates (Metropolitan) and Mr. E. V. Hooper (North-Eastern) were among the subsequent speakers.

ADULTERATION OF OLIVE OIL.—In the course of a prosecution for adulteration heard before the Burton magistrates yesterday, the inspector, who instituted the proceedings against a local grocer, intimated that it had come to the knowledge of the Government that cotton-seed oil was being imported into Italy on an extensive scale, which led them to closely investigate the quality of the imports from that country. In the present case they found the olive oil to contain fifty per cent. of cotton-seed oil. A nominal fine was inflicted.

THE EMPEROR WILLIAM IN ROME.

VISIT TO THE VATICAN.

[TELEGRAM FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

BERLIN, OCT. 12.

German sympathy for Italy has always been very marked amongst all grades of society, and well-to-do and well informed Germans spend their holidays more amongst the art treasures of the Transalpine cities than anywhere else. Their æsthetic sympathy for the country of that portion of the Latin race has developed the political ties between the two nations in proportion as they have been separated from France. The Foreign Office of Berlin seems to be highly satisfied with the course things are taking in Rome, to judge from to-night's Norddeutsche:

"Every German patriot's heart beats quicker," says Prince Bismarck's organ, "at the grand and festal reception accorded to Kaiser Wilhelm in the Italian capital; but all the ceremonial splendour falls into the background in presence of the pleasing winning warmth of the personal greeting which the German sovereign received from the King and Queen of Italy and all the Princes and Princesses of the Royal family, surrounded by the shouts of joy, rising from the crowd that had reached the very height of enthusiasm—a crowd composed of delegates from the whole country. This shows the folly of the attempt made by the envious French press to represent the festal days at Rome as being of an artificial nature, got up for the occasion. We Germans know that the national pulse of the whole of Italy is beating in the festivities prepared for Kaiser William on the strand of the Tiber. Germany reads the telegraphic accounts of Italian enthusiasm that come from the other side of the Alps with great pride and inmost satisfaction, and will accept Italy's hospitality to its universally honoured sovereign as a valuable pledge of the affinity that now exists between north and south."

ROME, OCT. 12.

The Emperor William rode out early this morning with General Driquet, who has been placed by the King at his Majesty's disposal, to visit the camp at Centocelle, where the review will be held to-morrow. On returning to the Quirinal the Emperor received a visit from King Humbert.

In political circles here the Emperor's attention in visiting yesterday all the Princes of the House of Savoy is regarded as still further accentuating the political significance of his Majesty's visit to Rome.

The newspapers in all parts of the country to-day publish leading articles welcoming the Emperor William, and pointing out that the reception accorded to the Imperial visitor yesterday bore witness to the value attached by Italy to the German peace alliance. Alluding to the Emperor's visit to the Vatican, the Opinione says: "The Emperor will go to-day to visit the Pope. Far from regretting this, we consider it a proof of the sincerity with which Italy has adhered to the promises given to the world by King Victor Emmanuel. The Emperor William, who is King Humbert's guest, will go to pay his respects to the Pontiff, being received with sovereign pomp by his Holiness in the latter's quality of Religious Head, in virtue of the Italian Law of Guarantees."

The journal Esercito greets the Emperor in the name of the army, declaring that the Italian alliance with Germany commenced in 1866, is the logical outcome of a situation stronger than all traditions or personal sympathies, and has been so strengthened in the succeeding twenty years as now to form an essential basis of the European balance of power. The journal adds: "The Italian army, a portion of which will be inspected by the Emperor, shouts to-day, 'Long live the Emperor! Long live the German Army!' This shout will be heard beyond the Alps, finding there a sympathetic echo among the military fraternity."

The Emperor William, accompanied by his aide-de-camp, drove in a Court carriage, shortly before noon, to the Prussian Legation, where Cardinals Rampolla and Hohenlohe and Mgr. Mocenni and Mgr. Agliardi had previously arrived. After they had been presented to his Majesty the distinguished visitors were entertained at lunch by Dr. von Schlözer. The Emperor sat between Cardinals Hohenlohe and Rampolla. The latter had on his left Count Herbert Bismarck, Prince Henry sitting opposite his Majesty, between Mgr. Agliardi and Mgr. Mocenni, on whose left sat Dr. von Schlözer. Cardinal Rampolla proposed the health of the Emperor, who responded by proposing that of the Pope, drinking from a glass which formerly belonged to Charles V. After luncheon the Emperor entered the carriage specially brought from Berlin and drove to the Vatican, the route as far as the gates being lined by troops. On the other side of the Ponte St. Angelo, in the Borgo quarter, flags were suspended from the windows and numerous devices were displayed, bearing the inscriptions "Viva Guglielmo," "Viva Roma Intangibile," and "Viva Umberto." At the Castle of St. Angelo, where the Città Leonina commences, the following inscription in large letters was displayed: "Welcome and glory to the Emperor of Germany, the august guest of Humbert our King in Rome, the unassailable capital of Italy." The inhabitants of the Borgo cheered his Majesty enthusiastically as the procession passed. It was feared that the Extreme party would take the opportunity to make a hostile demonstration against the Vatican, but no incident whatever occurred, the inhabitants beyond the Tiber being merely desirous of displaying their patriotic sentiments.

The Emperor entered the Vatican at two o'clock, and was received by Prince Ruspoli di Cerveteri, Maestro dello Sacro Ospizio, who conducted his Majesty to the Pope's apartments. Two companies of the Palatine Guard were stationed in the entrance hall as a guard of honour. The Pope received the Emperor surrounded by his whole Court. His Majesty advanced, and bent the knee to his Holiness as a mark of veneration, whereupon the Pope invited the Emperor to seat himself beside him. The various suites having been presented, his Holiness rose and led the way to the Sala Gialla, where he had a private interview with the Emperor lasting twenty-three minutes. No other person was present, but when the Emperor reappeared his face bore traces of deep emotion. A procession was then formed to visit the museums and galleries of the Vatican. First came four soldiers of the Swiss Guard with halberds, followed by a number of the Noble Guard, the Emperor walking next beside Mgr. Rampolla, immediately behind them being Prince Henry and Cardinal Sinistri. Next in order followed a detachment of the Palatine Guard, and the high dignitaries of the Pontifical Court, who mixed with the Emperor's suite. Having examined the galleries and museums and the library, his Majesty descended to St. Peter's and inspected the sacred edifice. At four o'clock the Emperor left the Vatican and drove direct to the Quirinal.

It is understood that Count Herbert Bismarck will to-morrow pay a special visit to Cardinal Rampolla, the Pontifical Secretary of State.

LOSS OF THE EMPEROR FREDERICK'S CIPHER.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

BERLIN, OCT. 12.

The Politische Nachrichten states that the cipher code placed at the late Emperor Frederick's disposal for correspondence with the chief functionaries of the Empire is missing. This code was in the late Emperor's room at the time of his death, but no trace of it can now be found. The journal adds that there is little doubt that it has been stolen.

THE "BLACK-MOUNTAIN" WAR.

[REUTER'S TELEGRAM.]

SIMLA, OCT. 12.

A detachment of the fourth column of General M'Queen's expedition crossed the Indus two miles above Kotkai, on the 10th inst., and reconnoitred the country on the West bank. The detachment recrossed the river the same evening. A skirmish occurred in which two Sepoys were wounded, and several of the enemy were killed. The column has been ordered to cross the river again to destroy the Hassanzai villages. There is no news from the other columns.

SIMLA, OCT. 12 (6.50 P.M.)

The fourth column of General M'Queen's expedition has advanced two miles in a northerly direction. It occupied Kunhar yesterday.

Last night's Gazette contains the Speaker's notice that the death of Mr. Henry Richard, the late member for Merthyr Tydvil, having been duly certified to him, he will issue his warrant to the Clerk of the Crown to make out a new writ for the election of his successor.

THE EXPULSION OF M. GARASHDANIN.—M. Garashdanin, the leader of the Progressists, has declared, in reply to the summons requesting him to leave Servia, that, being convinced of his innocence, he will only yield to force. It is feared that, if King Milan does not rescind this severe measure, it will lead to a Cabinet crisis, as M. Christics, the Premier, has declared that he cannot accept the responsibility for any further measures taken against M. Garashdanin.—Reuter.

J. L. ROECKEL'S NEW SONG. Words by F. E. WEATHERLY.
WHO WAS IT?
Sung by Madame Fogel, Madame Winn, Madame Raymond, Miss Ethel Winn, &c.

The flowers were bright, the fields were gay,
The birds were singing to each other;
Who kept me stitching, stitch all day?
My anxious mother.
Who found me looking glum and grey,
And had with her a quarrel—rather?
Who took me off, and went away?
My loving father.

Who was it leapt across the stile
And asked me softly where was mother?
Who was it wanted me to smile—just to smile?
'Twas not my brother.
Who was it stayed till eventime?
Who led me home among the clover?
Who whispered, "Darling, you are mine"?
My own true lover.

Who was it saw us going back,
And pried and watched us from their stations?
Who was it painted us so black—so very black?
My fond relations!
Who does not trouble what they say,
Or if they ring it from the steeple?
Who means to do the same next day?
Your humble servant, gentle people.
Patey and Willis, 44, Great Marlborough-street, London, W.

"Como Silk Coverlets.—Messrs. Debenham and Freebody have introduced a novelty in Italian silks that has every claim to popularity by reason of beauty of colouring and genuineness of material. This novelty is hand-woven by peasants on the shores of the Lake of Como, and not only can they be used for coverlets, but they would prove most effective for portieres and curtains, lending themselves specially to decorative purposes generally. They are inexpensive, warm, light, and do not crease, being woven with unadulterated silk."—The Queen.
